THE PURITY OF ELECTIONS.

EDMUNDS, BLAINE, AND CHANDLER SPEAK.

THE BOURBON BILL PASSED—THREE REMARKABLE SPEECHES—MR. CHANDLER CHARGES FRAUD AND VIOLENCE AGAINST THE SOUTHERN SENATORS—GREAT EXCITEMENT CAUSED THEREBY—A WARNING AND A CHALLENGE.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The consideration of the bill to prevent military interference with elections was resumed in the Senate to-day, and, after several hours' debate, was passed by a vote of 33 to 23. Mr. Edmunds made a strong legal argument in opposition to the principle of the bill, prefacing his remarks with citations from the Constitution and the statutes to show that the laws which it was proposed to repeal were intended to clothe the President with the authority to use all the power of the Constitution, including the military power, to enforce the laws of the United States and to preserve peace, order, and liberty, which, he contended, could not exist separately. He showed that from the beginning of the Government United States Marshals have had the authority to call upon the military to enforce law and to suppress disorder, and the authority of the President to use all the power of the Government upon all occasions, when the use of such power became necessary, was never disputed until these later days. He argued that the pending bill would, in effect, repeal the laws which authorized the President and other Federal officers to maintain the peace and suppress disorder. The posse comitatus law of 1878, prevented the use of military power, unless expressly authorized by the Constitution and acts of Congress, and the bill under consideration was aimed at the repeal of those specific acts of Congress excepted in the posse comitatus law.

Mr. Edmunds then took up the pending bill, and, proceeding to criticise it, showed that it was inconsistent in its terms. The preamble declares that the presence of troops at the polls is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and tends to destroy the freedom of elections, and yet the body of the bill prescribes that troops may be used at the polls in certain emergencies, which are specified. He contended, therefore, that either the declaration of the preamble was false, or the body of the bill aimed to enact a wrong which was condemned in the preamble. He alluded to the argument of Senator Morgan, in which that gentleman contended that the United States had no authority to enter a State, and argued that if they were no part of the territory of the United States was it marred that the Federal Government could not occupy it. The authority of the United States existed everywhere throughout the country. It was in the bones and sinews of every citizen, and he wished he could say it had existence in the heart of every citizen. The bill, he said, was intended to strip the United States of its constitutional power, and he warned Senators that its passage meant the surrender of the power necessary to maintain the existence of the Government. The laws which it would repeal were enacted to maintain purity of elections, which was essential to the perpetuity of the Government and the peace and prosperity of the people. Organized violence might drive the judiciary from the Bench and take forcible possession of the court of justice, but the power of the Government was sufficient to suppress such violence, and no loss would follow, except that which would result from delay of administration; but when the purity of elections was assailed the very vitals of the Government were struck at. If power was necessary to preserve the departments of the Government against violence, how much more was it to protect the officers of the Government with full power to protect the elections against unlawful combinations, which, if permitted to succeed, would overturn and destroy it. Mr. Edmunds spoke in this strain for over three hours, and was attentively listened to by both sides. His speech was a clear and logical argument in support of the authority of the Federal Government against the State rights theories advanced by Senator Morgan and other Democrats, and in favor of maintaining intact all laws now on the statute-books intended to preserve the purity of elections, and those laws which give the Federal Government power to enforce its authority at all times and by all the power vested in the Executive by the Constitution.

During the delivery of his speech Senator Edmunds was not interrupted, and, from the character of his remarks, it was believed the discussion would be continued in the same vein from the Democratic side. No Democratic Senator, however, rose to reply to him, and it was apparent that they had concluded to abandon the discussion and force a vote on the bill. As no one rose to reply to Mr. Edmunds, the presiding officer was about to put the question on the passage of the bill, when Mr. Blaine arose and offered his amendment, making it unlawful for any armed citizen to come within one mile of a polling-place, where any general or special election was being held, upon the suspicion of several Republican Senators he withdrew it.

Mr. Blaine then said that he wanted to insert a punctuation mark, to draw the attention of the country to the ancient and exploded doctrine of State rights, which was receiving, just now, such powerful expression on the Democratic side. The Democrats had ever been the exponents of this doctrine, but it was now receiving from the representatives of that party a more offensive and dangerous presentation than ever before. He traced the history of State rights down to 1860, and said that Jackson stamped it out, but that Van Buren dallied with it, while Polk yielded to its fullest influence and did its bidding, as did Pierce and Buchanan. In 1860 it manifested its hoary under Breckinridge and was trampled out. Afterward it had unsuccessfully attempted to destroy the Government. "Pass this bill," said he, "and you give a broader expression to the doctrine of State rights than Calhoun ever contended for, or thought of, so far as is known. Mr. Blaine only spoke for about five minutes, but he made many telling points which fitted in with the admirable argument of Mr. Edmunds.

After Senator Blaine had finished his speech and received applause from the galleries, the President pro tem. was just on the point of calling for a vote on the bill, when, much to the surprise of every one in the Senate Chamber, Zachariah Chandler, pale, trembling, and very much excited, rose to make a speech. At once there was the utmost silence in the chamber. The Democrats hurried in from the cloak-rooms, evidently expecting what was to come, and in a few moments the galleries were well filled by idlers from the Capitol, who, as always in the recess for an interesting speech had ever on hand expecting a sensation. Upon this occasion, at least, they were not disappointed. Senator Chandler made a most remarkable speech, and, evidently without any previously conceived intention, succeeded in creating more excitement than has been witnessed in the Senate during the present session. He began by the declaration that history was repeating itself, and taking this statement for his text, went on for 15 minutes to show that the same influence, the clique, and the same section which controlled the Democracy at the outbreak of the rebellion controlled it to-day. At that time, the speaker declared, the dominant party was controlled by a caucus, exactly as it is to-day. Then, sneer, the Northern Democrats were absolutely under the control of their Southern brethren; and the same sneer, the caucus was controlled and managed by the White Leagues bull-dozers. Even Stephen A. Douglas was crowded out of his party because of his independent utterances and action, and degraded from his position as Chairman of the Committee on Territories. He, like every other Northern Democrat, continued Mr. Chandler with much feeling, was crowded off the bridge and into the deep waters from which none of them have ever since risen. Mr. Chandler declared that the same fate awaited the Northern allies of the party which was now in control of the Executive branch of the Government, and to prove this assertion read from the Record, to show the number of Northern Democrats who were in the Senate just before the war and the number which is in the Senate at the present time. In the course of his remarks upon this point he referred with telling effect to that distinguished Independent, David Davis, by declaring that the present Independent party in the Senate, true to its tradition, always voted as a unit in favor of the Democracy, and continuing, Mr. Chandler said that the Northern Democrats were being again crowded off the bridge. They were being forced into a position which their constituents, without regard to party, could not and would not approve, and like their predecessors, he believed that they would shortly sink out of sight, never to be heard from more. They were asked to vote for bills which made the war a mockery and a reproach, and they tamely did as they were directed. They were ordered to vote a pension to Jeff Davis, and they submitted without a word. Deaving the Northern Democrats for a moment, the speaker referred to their Southern brethren. For these men of the South, for these men who had been in war against their country, he said the loyal people of the nation had killed the fatted calf. This they had done in their great magnanimity, but instead of thanking them for their kindness, the gentlemen of the South had, ever since they had had the power to do so, acted as if they had always been owned by them. This really caused a great deal of merriment, and then the Senator went on.

Referring to the efforts which are being made to unseat Senator Kellogg, Mr. Chandler created the most intense excitement by declaring that, in his opinion, there were 12 gentlemen among the Democrats—referring, of course, to the Southern Bourbons—who had their seats upon a much slighter basis than the Senator from Louisiana did; and who, in fact, owed their election to violence and fraud. Upon this, Mr. Eaton, who was even more excited than Mr. Chandler, jumped to his feet and demanded that the gentleman be called to order. A most exciting scene ensued. Mr. Chandler's words were read by the official reporter, and Messrs. Beck, Houston, and other Democrats asked for a ruling on Mr. Eaton's call to order. Mr. Thurman, who was in the chair, promptly and much to the surprise of every one present, decided the point of order not well taken, and Mr. Chandler went on with his speech, repeating, with aggravating deliberation, his former remark in regard to the title by which certain Democrats held their seats. He then dared the Democrats to remove Kellogg, and concluded by declaring that every dog had his day; that the days of the Democratic majority were numbered; that Mene, Mene, Tekel Upharsin was written all over their brows.

Tale was the end of the debate. Mr. Chandler sat down amid loud applause, and then the bill was passed by a vote of 33 to 23. Immediately afterward the Legislative Appropriation bill was taken up, and then the Senate adjourned.

The bill passed to-day by the Senate was the bill of the House, which was passed by that body on Tuesday last, and which was on the table of the Senate. The House bill was substituted to-day for that of the Senate, in accordance with the decision of a private conference of leading Democrats of both branches of Congress held this morning. It will be laid before the President to-morrow.

During the past two days there has been considerable change of sentiment among the Republicans as to what the action of the President will be. Many who, a few days ago, felt confident that he would approve the bill, now express the belief that he will veto it. There does not seem, however, to be any good reason for this change in sentiment, and the fact that those who are believed to sustain intimate relations with the President incline to the belief that he will approve it, warrants the prediction that he will do so.

A DAY OF TALK IN THE HOUSE.

MR. COX ADVOCATING UNIVERSAL AMNESTY—THE SILVER BILL DEBATE CONTINUED.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Nothing of special interest was done in the House to-day. A sharp colloquy arose over a bill to remove the political disabilities of Gen. Pemberton, a native of Pennsylvania, who was residing in the South when the rebellion began, and who joined the rebel service. Mr. Cox, of New-York, advocated the passage of a general amnesty bill which would include every man who participated in the rebellion who had not been pardoned. After wrangling for some time over a resolution to pay the clerks of the House for time for which they have once been paid, the discussion of the Silver bill was resumed. Mr. Weaver, Greenbacker, of Iowa, delivered a speech said to have been made several times during his campaign for Congress, and was followed by Mr. Hollman, of Indiana, who spoke against the bill. No movement has been made looking to a vote upon the bill, and it looks as if the discussion would be continued through next week.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, May 9, 1879.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $721,847 45, and from Customs $526,289 35.

The subscription to the 4 per cent. refunding certificates since yesterday's report have amounted to $236,550. Owing to the demand being greater than the supply the Treasury Department has been compelled to regulate the issue of certificates to depositories.

Secretary Sherman having returned from Ohio, there was a full meeting of the Cabinet to-day, but no important business was transacted. The chief topic discussed was the movement of settlers toward the Indian Territory. The Attorney-General reiterated his opinion that it was clearly in violation of law. The latest reports to the Secretary of War serve to confirm the belief that the movement has been exaggerated.

Commissioner Raum authorizes an unqualified contradiction of the repeatedly published statement that in response to a letter from the Collector of the Fifth Iowa District, he has rendered a decision "that banks are not entitled to deduct their United States refunding certificates from their taxable capital," as they would be entitled to deduct Government bonds. The Commissioner says that not only has he not decided no such decision, but the question has not yet been considered, and he has formed no opinion with regard to it.

Senator Williams, of Kentucky, to-day introduced a joint resolution to make the appropriation of March 21, 1877, of $275,000 for the payment of ante-Bellum Southern mail contractors, unexpectedly available, it having been "tied up" by a Treasury ruling to await the decision of all such claims and that the Attorney-General be requested to report that should be paid to each claimant pro rata. Mr. Williams's joint resolution directs the Secretary of the Treasury to proceed to pay to the contractors, or their legal representatives, such sums as the Post Office Department certificates may prove to be due them respectively, provided that no payment shall be made to any claimant without satisfactory proof that he has not already been paid by the Confederate States.

Mr. Lapham, of New-York, has introduced in the House a joint resolution providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the text of which is as follows: "Whenever any appropriation bill shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, and shall be presented to the President for his approval, he may withhold his approval in any single item or items of said bill, and approve the remainder, and in such case he shall state his objections to the portions disapproved in the same manner as is provided in article 1, section 7, of the Constitution, and all provisions of said section as to bills not approved shall apply to the item or items so disapproved." The measure was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution which Mr. Murch proposes to introduce granting to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authority to investigate all matters in connection with the erection of contracts for furnishing public buildings was examined by the committee to-day. It authorizes the committee to report, by bill or otherwise, what legislation is necessary to secure good and suitable work at fair prices and at a fair and reasonable compensation to mechanics and laborers employed. The resolution concludes by stating that inquiry be made into the charge that the tools used in preparing stone for the New-York Court-house and Post Office Building were sold at public auction on the completion of said buildings, and unprocured for use at the Philadelphia Court-house and Post Office, and that the figures of the contractors be stated, and the amount they received for said work. The subject was referred to a sub-committee.

MYSTERIOUS RAVINGS BLIND OFFICERS.

NYACK, N. Y., May 9.—In the Rockland County Circuit Court, before Judge Dykman, the suit of Receiver William J. Green against Samuel W. Caufield and others, Trustees of the Rockland Savings Bank, for moneys misappropriated or wasted by them, was decided to-day, and a verdict for $36,630, with allowance of cost and interest making in all about $43,000, was given for the plaintiff against Samuel W. Caufield, the President, and Richard F. Rolls, the Secretary of the bank. The jury found in favor of the other defendants. The indictments against Caufield and Rolls for perjury and embezzlement will be tried on May 27.

TARIFF DISCUSSION ABROAD.

THE DEBATE IN THE REICHSTAG—BISMARCK'S ANGRY WITHDRAWAL.

BERLIN, May 9.—In yesterday's debate on the tariff in the Reichstag, Herr Windthorst, the Ultramontane leader, spoke in favor of protection. Whatever, he said, were the grievances and oppression in Church matters, of which they had to complain, the Centre would never carry their opposition à outrance, and where the throne, the fatherland, and the most vital interests of the country were at stake, they would always support the Government. He hoped Prince Bismarck would show himself for the future as independent of ecclesiastical counsellors as he had now shown himself of economic advisers.

The scene between Prince Bismarck and Herr Lasker caused a great tumult for a short time. Herr Lasker pronounced certain figures issued by the Chancellor untrustworthy. The President decided the expression to be parliamentary, and therefore that it did not justify the Prince's sharp retorts. Prince Bismarck leaned carelessly against a column during the President's remarks, and at the close advanced, drew himself up to his full height, and said that while he respected the President's decision, he himself was President of the Federal Council, and had nothing to retract.

The motion of Herr Loewe, referring a portion of the Tariff bill to a committee of 28 members, was adopted to-day.

MADRID, May 9.—The civil corporations of the Provinces have passed a resolution declaring against the suppression of the differential duty on goods shipped in foreign bottoms has had disastrous consequences for the Spanish mercantile Navy.

The octroi duties on corn and flour entering Madrid have been abolished on account of the high price of provisions.

PARIS, May 9.—The Municipal Council has resolved to refuse to admit any longer free of octroi duty, articles of consumption intended for representatives of foreign countries residing in Paris.

LONDON, May 10.—The Post's dispatch from Berlin says the vote on Herr Loewe's motion is regarded as indicating that the Government is certain of a majority on the Tariff bill, even if all the Liberals oppose it.

LONDON, May 10.—A dispatch to the Standard from Lahore announces that Yakoob Khan has accepted all the British proposals. These advance the frontier line so as to give the British the Kojuk Pass, Pisheen Valley, the Kurum Valley as far as Shutargardan Pass, and the Khyber Pass as far as Loarai. The British also gain the right to keep an agent at Kandahar; but the Standard's correspondent is not informed as to whether they are to have agents at Kabul and Herat. It is not known whether the treaty will be signed immediately at Candamak or later at Kabul. Major Cavagnari will return as Envoy to Kabul with Yakoob Khan.

CURRENT FOREIGN TOPICS.

LONDON, May 9.—Lord George F. Hamilton, Vice-President of the Council, was incorrectly reported as having said in the House of Commons yesterday, in reply to a question, that swine from the United States had been discovered suffering from the trichina worm. What he did say, in reply to a specific question, was that he had not heard of trichinæ in American swine. The order requiring that swine from the United States shall be slaughtered at the port of landing after the 1st of June, is in consequence of typhus having been discovered in swine from the United States. Five hundred head of cattle from South America were slaughtered at Glasgow yesterday in consequence of disease.

The candidate for admission must appear before a Justice of the Peace, signify in writing his wish to be admitted, and state the time during which he is willing to continue an inmate. This done, he is no longer a free agent. He must stay out the time for which he has bound himself, and conform to the regulations of the establishment, however distasteful they may be to him.

WINDING UP ITS BUSINESS.

THE ATLANTIC FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY CONCLUDES TO GO OUT OF EXISTENCE.

ALBANY, May 9.—Some time ago Superintendent Smyth, of the Insurance Department, gave notice to the Atlantic Fire Insurance Company, which is nominally of Brooklyn, but really has its main office at No. 178 Broadway, New-York City, that its Directors must make good $56,000 deficit in its capital or retire from business. This morning Mr. Smyth received a letter from John D. Cooke, President of the company, who says: "I laid the matter before my Board of Directors, who have advised to wind up instead. I have, therefore, the honor to advise you that we have reinsured all our risks in the Home Insurance Company of New-York, and have ceased taking any new risks after the 5th inst. We are paying all claims as fast as they become due and are adjusted." The letter is accompanied by a circular to all the company's agents, directing them to turn over everything to the Home Company's agents, and also a circular from the Home Company to its agents, directing a demand for everything from the agents of the Atlantic. Mr. Smyth, in reply says that the arrangements are all that can be demanded under the law. Consequently, from this date, the Atlantic Fire Insurance Company is a defunct institution. The company has been engaged in a very large and an unusually disastrous business. Its report of condition on Jan. 1, 1879, showed that it had $386,590 unobjectionable assets, and that its surplus was $37,545. Its capital stock was $200,000, and its liabilities, including its capital stock, were only $349,045. But for last year's business was so disastrous that its net surplus was reduced from $109,571 to $37,545, while with an income of $299,597, its expenditures were $334,923. It was upon this showing that Mr. Smyth ordered it to make good its impaired deficiency. The Home Company, to which the business of the Atlantic has been transferred, is the largest in the State, its last report showing it to have $9,390,352 in unobjectionable assets.

A STEP-FATHER'S CRUELTY.

BEATING A BOY FOR AN HOUR AND RUBBING SALT IN HIS WOUNDS.

TRENTON, N. J., May 9.—Daniel Musgrave, an old offender, was arraigned this evening on the complaint of City Marshal Charles P. Brown, before Police Justice Handershott, charged with cruelly beating a son of his wife by a former husband. The boy, whose name is Jonathan Farrell, is between 11 and 12 years of age. On Wednesday last young Farrell, who had been sent out after wood, failed to get a sufficient quantity to satisfy his step-father, who compelled the lad to strip, and then, with a heavy whip with a buckle on the end of it, beat him for nearly an hour, cutting deep gashes and long welts into the flesh from which the blood flowed. After he had exhausted himself he stopped, and finding that the blood flowed too copiously, he rubbed salt and water into the cuts. The screams of the boy were heard by the neighbors who, however, did not interfere.

Musgrave denied the charge, but being interrogated at the hearing when the boy said he rubbed salt in the cuts said, "That's a lie; I put whisky on them." He said that the boy was incorrigible and would not obey him or sleep at home nights. The Police Justice held Musgrave for trial on a charge of atrocious assault and battery.

RISE IN BALTIMORE AND OHIO SHARES—A SOUTHERN ROAD'S TROUBLES.

BALTIMORE, May 9.—A remarkable rise has taken place in Baltimore and Ohio shares. Monday morning the quotation was 90. At midday Robert Garrett & Sons bought 1,300 shares scrip dividend from the city at 95½, and 583 shares from the Johns Hopkins estate at 95. Since then the price has advanced, on sales of only 906 shares, to 105¼ bid, or 15¼ per cent. in five days. No explanation is given by brokers, except that there is a general belief that the city holds 35,000 shares, and the estate about 14,500, so that the rise makes a difference in favor of these two holders of over $700,000.

NORFOLK, Va., May 9.—The decree granted by the United States Circuit Court in the matter of the Atlantic Mississippi and Ohio Railroad gives the trustees until next January to settle its past due interest, after which time 60 days' notice will be given before the sale takes place. It is settled that the road is not to be dismembered, but is to be sold as an entirety.

ARMY AND NAVY NOTES.

WASHINGTON, May. 9.—The measure introduced to-day by Senator McDonald concerning Army promotions is based upon the theory that the prohibitory clause of the act of June 18, 1878, is still in force. It, therefore, proposes to authorize the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to all vacancies now existing, or that may hereafter exist, in the Army, the officers entitled to be promoted under the laws regulating promotions which were in force prior to the 18th of June, 1878; provided, that no officer so appointed or promoted shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which he may be promoted prior to the enactment of this bill.

The Superintendent of the Mounted Recruiting Service will cause all available colored cavalry recruits to be forwarded to San Antonio, Texas, for assignment to the Tenth Cavalry.

Surgeon T. O. McPaulin, United States Army, has been relieved from duty in the Department of the East, and will report for duty as attending surgeon in New-York City.

The four companies of the Twenty-second Infantry, intended to replace the Tenth, in Texas, but ordered to report first to Gen. Sheridan for temporary service, if necessary, in the Indian Territory, are at present ice-bound in Lake Michigan. It is hoped, however, that they will be released within two or three days.

Commander F. V. McNair has been ordered to take command of the practice-ship Constellation. Surgeon M. L. Rich, Passed Assistant Surgeon Robert Whiting, and Paymaster A. S. Kenney have been assigned to duty on the same vessel, together with the following officers detached from the Naval Academy: Lieuts. M. R. S. Mackenzie, Samuel W. Very, Daniel Delahanty, Robert T. Jasper, William J. Barnett, and Sumner C. Paine; Masters S. A. Staunton and Charles W. Bartlett, and Chaplain Robert Hudson.

The Powhatan, flag-ship of the North Atlantic Station, Rear-Admiral Wyman commanding, sailed from Norfolk this morning for Port Royal. The Marion is at Norfolk awaiting orders.

The President sent to the Senate to-day the nomination of Passed Assistant Surgeon John W. Ross to be advanced eight numbers in his present grade.

A MARSHAL'S MISFORTUNE.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 9.—Some time ago Col. R. H. Crittenden, United States Marshal of Kentucky, arrested, through his deputies, G. W. Penn and W. T. Jackson, William Bryant, in the interior of this State, upon a charge of violating the Revenue laws. It was shown by the trial that Bryant was not the man who had committed the offense, and he was consequently discharged. He then brought suit against Marshal Crittenden and Deputies Penn and Jackson for $500 damages for false imprisonment. Bryant gained the suit, and a writ of execution was issued in the Jefferson Circuit Court against the defendants, on which Major Penn was arrested on April 12, but he took the insolvent debtor's oath and was released. This morning Col. Crittenden was also arrested on this writ by the Sheriff, and lodged in jail. He was released this evening, probably having taken the oath of insolvency. The Government has refused to help the Marshal.

STATE VERSUS FEDERAL AUTHORITY.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 9.—F. M. Ramsey, United States Deputy Marshal, charged with killing Lightfoot, was tried in the Federal Court here to-day on a writ of habeas corpus and discharged. Ramsey was removed from the custody of the civil authorities by order of the United States court. Judge Ballard delivered a long opinion, the substance of which was that the court had jurisdiction of the matter in question, and, having hitherto fully heard a statement of the facts in the case, it was not necessary to listen to them again. Ramsey was again discharged from custody, and the next step will probably be a bench-warrant from the Warren County Court of Common Pleas when it meets Monday.

HARVARD'S OARSMAN VICTORIOUS.

GODDARD BEATS LIVINGSTONE BY TEN LENGTHS IN THE SINGLE-SCULL RACE.

WORCESTER, Mass., May 9.—The single-scull race between Warren N. Goddard, of Harvard, and Edmund P. Livingstone, of Yale, took place this afternoon on Lake Quinsigamond. The day was perfect, and the race was witnessed by a large number of students and others from Boston and Worcester, the distance from New-Haven keeping many Yale men away. Livingstone's sympathizers, however, were numerous among the people of Worcester and what Yale men were present. The scene at the lake was a miniature representation of an old-time Harvard-Yale race. A grand stand on Regatta Point, a few more hucksters about, more crimson and blue, six-oared crews instead of single scullers, and last, but what was a chief feature in the old college races, more of the fair sex, to lend grace and enthusiasm to the occasion, and the scenes at the lake of a July day about 10 years ago would be enacted over again. The 11 A. M. express from Boston brought a delegation of Harvard students, but more came on the later trains, which also brought a number of sporting men. About 1,500 people altogether witnessed the race.

A southerly wind did not make the lake too rough for the most fastidious sculler. The referee's boat started up the course at 4:30 P. M., and after carefully examining the stake boats, found them in correct position. She then returned, and at 5:05 the signal for the men to get ready was given. Livingstone appeared first, wearing a blue cap and white shirt, and soon took his position. Goddard came five minutes later, shooting the causeway, and was loudly cheered by the Harvard men. He wore a crimson handkerchief on his head, and his sculls were tipped with crimson. Like Livingstone, he wore a white shirt, but his face and arms were browned by exposure. The boats were quickly aligned, and the word was given at 5:18½. Livingstone took the water first, and led by a few feet. In 20 lengths out, however, Goddard closed this up, and at Regatta Point showed half a boat length in front. Goddard started off pulling a deliberate 34 stroke, while Livingstone went off somewhat unsteadily at 36. Livingstone steered to toward Goddard's side, but was soon warned off by the referee. After passing Regatta Point Goddard dropped his stroke to 31, and kept his eye on his opponent, whom he led by a length of clear water. About half a mile from the start Goddard, who steered over to the eastern shore to get smoother water, was in turn warned, and quickly resumed his course. The stake-boat was reached in just 6:50 by Goddard, who now had two lengths of clear water. He turned in 0:10, and struck out for home, with a long, clean stroke, as fresh as when he started. When the scullers passed the referee's boat, an eighth of a mile from the stake, Livingstone appeared greatly distressed. He stuck to his work manfully, however, but Goddard kept increasing the lead, and at Regatta Point was eight lengths in front. Here he spurted, and finished in 14:30, 10 lengths ahead. Livingstone finished in 14:50. The Harvard men cheered Goddard loudly, but the Yale men were few, and, in view of the result, made little demonstration. The referee was Edwin Brown, of Worcester; judges for Goddard, Walter Trimble and Edmund L. Bayliss; for Livingstone, Julian Curtiss and Herman Livingstone.

THE OHIO CANDIDATES.

DEMOCRATS EXCITED BY SHERMAN'S VISIT—THE CANDIDATES FOR NOMINATION.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 9.—The visit of Secretary Sherman to Ohio and the attendant excitement has created much commotion in Democratic ranks. This was noticed in the immediate arrival upon the ground of John Thompson, but since the Secretary has departed and the excitement has had some opportunity to subside, considerations of the exact bearings are of interest. Leading Democrats believe that Sherman will be the candidate for Governor, and intends thus to forward his Presidential aspiration, as before his arrival upon the scene the other day everybody on both sides admitted that the fight for the nomination on the Democratic side was narrowed to Bishop and Rice, with Bishop leading. The convention comes on June 4, less than a month hence, and there was not much chance of a change. Now the prospects are that a dozen candidates may take the field. The Hon. H. J. Heisley, a prominent candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor two years ago, says that there is no doubt that Sherman is in the field, and that he will bring out Ewing, whose friends will say that Sherman, being a representative of the hard-money idea, should be put up as an opponent on the other side. Durbin Ward's friends will think that he, being always a consistent hard-money man, should naturally oppose Sherman. Then, Milton Southard and Frank Hurd, and nobody knows how many others, will be trotted out. It has complicated things materially.

Several Democrats have the idea that there is no chance now to carry the State unless Thurman is placed at the head of their ticket. They say he hesitates, evidently fearing that he cannot carry the State, and knows that if he fails, his hopes of the Presidency are gone forever, for if not nominated this time he never will be. On the other hand, if the State should go Democratic and he lies back, he will stand a chance of nomination by those who will say that he only can carry the State. The Democrats all pretend to say that Sherman is not the most powerful man that the Republicans can nominate. V. W. Kline, a leading Democrat, says that many of the common people would repudiate Sherman yet on account of financial schemes, and that they attribute hard times to him. City Solicitor Heisley, a Democrat, says that the ticket must be Sherman and Thurman; that nothing else can stand any chance of winning. He says the Ohio Gubernatorial ticket will be one for 1880. Republican leaders are much interested in the way things are shaping themselves, and are generally for Sherman, if he will accept. Many Democrats think Sherman would not make so strong a man for Governor as Foster, but this may be all talk.

INVASION OF INDIAN TERRITORY.

CHICAGO, May 9.—The stories in regard to the alleged invasion of the Indian Territory by the white settlers seems to have been greatly exaggerated, as the news just received at the military headquarters shows that the movement has been almost entirely repressed, if it ever really reached any great proportions. The commanding officer at Venita, Indian Territory, reports that the Indian Agent at Haworth informs him that he has spent several days on the Quapey lands, and found many claims staked out, and the claimants' names on the trees, but that the settlers themselves had returned to Kansas and Missouri. Similar reports come from Wichita, where a number of persons passed through on their way to the Territory, but, on learning of the determined stand of the Government, had stopped and settled in Kansas. The commanding officer at the cantonment reports that on his way out he met several parties of intending settlers leaving the Territory. Whatever strength the movement may have had, it is certain that the active measures taken have entirely repressed any intending settlers from locating on lands in the Indian Territory.

NOT PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, May 9.—On Wednesday, Messrs. Lane & Cook, lawyers from Iowa, made application to Judge Butler to compel Isaac M. Cate and Richard L. Ashhurst to answer certain questions propounded to them in an examination before Commissioner Bell, and to produce certain letters. Proceedings to disbar Chester C. Cole, an ex-Judge of Iowa, are now pending before the United States Court of that State, it being alleged that he attempted to intimidate Judge Dillon, of the Iowa Circuit Court, in his discussion of the Iowa Central Railway Company, by causing attacks to be made upon him by various newspapers, criticising his conduct of the case. Messrs. Cate and Ashhurst, on being questioned before Commissioner Bell, refused to produce the letters or give any information concerning them. They claimed that the communications were privileged as being between lawyer and client, and, after their counsels were heard, To-day Judge Butler decided that they were not privileged communications, and that the witnesses must answer.

WARREN COUNTY'S BROKEN RING.

EX-DEMOCRATIC FREEHOLDER SWEENEY FOUND GUILTY OF FORGERY.

BELVIDERE, N. J., May 9.—J. Hudson Sweeney was called to answer to an indictment for forgery this morning. Chief-Justice Beasly being absent, Law Judge Barrow presided. Attorney-General Stockton was also absent, Prosecutor Harris conducting the case alone. Major A. B. Howell and Nicholas Harris appeared for the defendant. Prosecutor Harris in opening the case, explained that in 1877 Sweeney bought of one Joseph Keppler a bill against the county for nine days' service as a Deputy Sheriff, at $2 a day. This bill Sweeney altered to 17 days, at $2.50 a day, making a total of $50.50, which money he received from the County Collector. Sweeney was a Democratic Freeholder several years ago. Joseph Keppler testified that during the railroad strike in 1877, he, a resident of Phillipsburg, was summoned as a deputy by the Sheriff of the county; he served as such nine days; soon afterward he made out a bill for nine days' service at $2 a day, and sold it to Sweeney for $15; he signed a blank receipt on the bill, but made no affidavit to it. An affidavit now appears on the bill purporting to be taken before John D. Sweeney, a Justice of the Peace, and brother to the defendant. In a subsequent conversation, the defendant told the witness that he had sold his bill to John W. Dean, William E. Beers, Teller in a Phillipsburg bank for 18 years, identified the alterations as in the defendant's handwriting, and also thought that the signature of John D. Sweeney to the jurat was made by the defendant. The cross-examination, however, developed that the witness and the defendant were on good terms, the witness testifying positively that Sweeney ought not to be in State Prison. The County Collector and Sheriff testified as to the payment of the bill.

The defense denied the allegation of forgery. The defendant, Sweeney, testified that Keppler first approached him in regard to buying his bill, that a bill was made out for 17 days, at $2.50 a day, and a receipt signed by Keppler for that amount, Sweeney paying him $15, and agreeing to give him one-half of all over that amount that he received; the price per day had not been fixed by the Sheriff; no affidavit was made to the bill; this bill, the witness testified, he sold, the same day, to William Comfort, a dealer in notes and paper, and had not seen it since until recently. Comfort has fled, leaving his debts unpaid. Testimony was introduced to show that Keppler had tried to sell his bill to other persons, to one for $40 and to another for $37, telling the first person that it was for 17 days' service. These witnesses did not, however, come out of the cross-examination with flying colors. The defense also brought witnesses to prove the genuineness of the signature of John D. Sweeney, the Justice of the Peace, to the affidavit on the bill, but the Prosecutor called as many witnesses who pronounced it a forgery. The Prosecutor, in rebuttal, called Judge Kern from the bench to testify that when Judge Sweeney was brought into court to give his bail, he made voluntary confession that he sold Keppler's bill to John W. Dean. The case of the defendant was summed up by Major Howell. Prosecutor Harris followed him, after which Judge Barrow charged the jury, somewhat against the defendant, and the jury retired at 4:30 P. M. Sweeney's bail surrendered him, and he was committed to jail. A verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy, was rendered at 6:30 P. M.

TRYING TO SUPPRESS RITUALISM.

ACTION OF THE DIOCESAN CONVENTION IN PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, May 9.—Upon reassembling this morning, the second resolution upon ritualism was submitted to the Protestant Episcopal Convention. This prov devotedly, and she now hoped to persuade him to desert the Spencers. So she allowed Miles to talk her over, and took her place for the time being as No. 2.

Miles did not give her enough of his society the next day, and there was continual trouble from that time on. Before the wedding Miss Owen had declared, according to various reports, that she would marry Miles, but would have her revenge afterward, and would poison him. This was to pay him for having promised her in London that she should be always first, whereas, since her arrival in Utah, he had said it was never his intention to give up Miss Spencer, or to have her anything but No. 2. After the wedding, taking a more reasonable view of the matter, the deserted woman sailed for Lake Mills, arrested for bigamy. The circumstances of her case were given to a reporter of the Salt Lake Tribune, and he wrote, with startling headlines and many damaging facts, appeared in that paper. The case acquired wide publicity, and aroused great indignation, both among the Mormons and against them. After all this had occurred Mrs. Owen Miles relented, yielding to an irresistible impulse to live with her husband. She followed him to American Fork, whither he had fled, and he agreed to take her back if she would recant the charges made in the Tribune. At his dictation she wrote a long statement, denying her previous statements and fully exonerating Miles. To this she was persuaded to swear, and the statement was printed in the Salt Lake Herald, the Mormon organ. In this she denied any knowledge of marriage between Miles and Miss Spencer, and upon this, in consequence, Miles largely depended for his defense if ever suit were brought against him. The suit was brought soon after this reconciliation, for wife Owen could not reconcile herself to the place of No. 2, and a serious quarrel resulted in Miles's arrest upon her complaint. The Mormons assert that the Gentiles were only too eager to support and assist the woman in her charge upon one of the divine institutions of their Church. It was not at that time believed that any jury could be found in Utah that would convict a citizen of polygamy as a crime under the law, and Miles felt easy enough in that respect. But now, after a week of trial, with great crowds in attendance, and in the midst of much excitement resulting from the long deferred imprisonment of Gen. Wells, the jury has found Miles guilty of bigamy in taking to himself as wives on that October day Emily Spencer first and Carrie Owen second. The result is one calculated to carry consternation into many a domestic camp in Utah. The man who marries more than one woman is indeed at the mercy of his wives in the light of such a verdict as this.

Among other interesting features brought out by the trial was the fact that very loose records are kept of the numerous marriages performed by the Apostles. President Taylor believed that a record-book was kept in the Endowment House, but could not speak with certainty on the point. The others who were questioned were not more specific in their information. It could not be proved by any of the Apostles that Miles had been married twice on the same day; hardly that he had ever been married at all. The three days that were consumed in the searching for a jury not composed of polygamists disclosed the fact that many members of the Church believed in its revelations in a general way, but were in doubt as to just what those doctrines were. Others believed in polygamy, but had never considered whether it was right or wrong. Others still were firm in their conviction that the revelations made by God to the Apostles were to be accepted in their entirety, and that if God's commands, as given to the Mormons, conflicted with the law of the land, the law of the land must give way.

The case of Gen. Wells was argued at length on Saturday last, and a strong plea was made for his acquittal. Judge Emerson held that the prisoner must be punished for his contumacy, and to uphold the dignity of the court, a penalty of two days' imprisonment and a fine of $100 were imposed. Sunday and Monday last Gen. Wells passed in the Penitentiary. This morning there gathered to escort him from the prison to his home, such an assembly as has rarely been seen in this city. From all parts of the Territory the Mormons came in rally around their leaders. The procession that was formed contained at least 10,000 people, men and women in carriages and on foot. Among these people were 10 Mayors of cities, all the Church dignitaries, and as many officers from the surrounding country as could reach this city in time. Bands were playing, and more than a hundred banners bearing the mottoes of the believers were flying, when Gen. Wells was escorted to his seat in a carriage with President Taylor. Three thousand Sunday-school children and a company of 400 elderly matrons were prominent features of the line. This great procession was greeted with cheers by thousands of spectators who crowded the sidewalks and buildings all along the line of march. Arrived at the Tabernacle, Gen. Wells thanked the people for their demonstration in his behalf and President Taylor expressed his loyalty to the Government, but protested against interference with his religious beliefs. Then the crowds were dismissed, and jubilation reigned throughout the city. This demonstration was never before equaled in Salt Lake, and it argues against the assertion that Mormonism is weakening. What is called the interference of the Federal Government with religious opinions and practices has apparently the effect to knit the Mormons more closely together, and to increase their blind loyalty to their leaders.

LAURENCE S. M'MAHON.

THE NEW CATHOLIC BISHOP OF HARTFORD.

From the Providence Journal, May 3.

A cablegram from Rome announces that the Very Rev. Dr. McMahon, Vicar-General of the Diocese of Providence, is appointed to the vacant See of Hartford. The Very Rev. Laurence S. McMahon was born in 1835, in New-Brunswick, whence he came to the United States in his fourth year. His early studies were made in the public schools of Boston. Subsequently he entered the College of Holy Cross, Worcester, where he commenced the college was burned down in 1851. He passed his theology in Montreal, and finished philosophy in Baltimore. From this city he went to the College of Aix, in France, where he studied theology, ending his course in Rome, where, on the 24th March, 1860, he was ordained priest, in the Basilica of St. John Lateran, by the Cardinal Vicar of his Holiness the Pope. On his return to America he was employed some short time at the Cathedral in Boston. In 1862 he commenced the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Regiment, as Chaplain, and on coming home was sent to Bridgewater as its first Pastor. On the 1st of July, 1865, he succeeded the Rev. J. J. Tallon in the Parish of New-Bedford, where he has labored so zealously ever since. He built and almost paid for the magnificent Gothic church of New-Bedford, and expended funds required for church purposes, and established a hospital for the sick, the only one in that city. On the creation of the Diocese of Providence, in 1872, the diocese comprising Rhode Island and some counties in Massachusetts, Father McMahon became a candidate for the new diocese, and was immediately chosen by Bishop Hendricken as his first Vicar-General. In 1873 he received from Rome the degree of D. D., an honor which he earnestly attaints justly merited. Dr. McMahon is a man of great piety, singular modesty, and sparing disposition. His knowledge is very extensive on almost every subject, and this with a happy, clear manner of expressing himself makes his company very attractive and profitable. He is a good theologian, and speaks the French and Italian languages with great fluency and purity. He dazzles with less his new dignity of duty an irreproachable character, a prudent zeal, a clear judgment, and a large fund of good common sense.

THAT CASE OF SOUTHERN "GRATITUDE."

Lawyer B. B. Barnes, of Memphis, Tenn., claims that he was justified in refusing to report anything concerning the "circumstances" of one of the victims of yellow fever in that city until he was paid $5 by the citizen of Ohio, at whose request he was called on to speak to them. It was supposed that if the speaker knew these men were there, as everybody else knew it, he would gladly speak to them, and the lobby, the hall, the same vestibule of the lobby. So at the end of a speech made by him on Wednesday night, and directed to sunny green and innocuous lobbyists in the front of the house, the suggestion was made that the Speaker probably did not know that at the time the Ohio gentleman had arrived in town and the yellow sitting-place just passed him, where the ladies of the city were used as coffee and smoking-room by "Jakey" Sharp and "Jim" Richmond.

At the Thursday night session Speaker Alvord, who was on the floor, a Committee of the Whole being in operation, appointed the Tennessee correspondent and focussed him of the chair of the House. He said he had not read the article alluded to, but everybody was talking about it and he was astonished that he had been misrepresented. His face was flushed, and he was clearly enraged. Without waiting to consult the paper, he began a long string of words which attracted the attention of the House. He declared that he had the power of appointment in that House, and the power to take away from reporters the privilege of the floor, and that if the TIMES's correspondent dared to leave his seat again during the session of the Legislature, he should be deprived of the privilege. He went from this subject in a more general discussion with Assemblyman Williams, but soon returned to say that perhaps he had inadvertently misread the meaning of the article to which he had alluded. The correspondent suggested that he should consult THE TIMES and ascertain for himself. This he did, and came back to renew his threat of expulsion, as he found the article, while the statement did not say he leaver the lobbyists were coming into his room, the irresistible inference would be that he did. Thereupon, in his injunction against leaving the seat set apart for the reporter, the reply was made that if he was necessary to leave the seat so frequently, at the time of the session required, the correspondent would not hesitate to do so with the same freedom he had before enjoyed. To this the Speaker angrily retorted that if the promise were carried out he would exclude the writer of the obnoxious paragraph immediately. This was the last word. To make a martyr of the writer, THE TIMES made by the Speaker was laughed at by members, none of whom could see how it was to be carried into effect, except by resolution, and not one member was inclined to double the fun with a resolution of this character, which the Speaker had so vehemently objected. Of course, the correspondent paid no regard to the order of the Speaker, and soon after, in his walk about the House, saw "Jakey" Sharp and "Jim" Richmond again in the Speaker's room, enjoying their evening cigars. Threats of this kind, prompted by newspaper articles, have been made before, but not the oldest reporter of the Assembly can remember when they were even started into effect.

LABORS IN THE ASSEMBLY.

WALKING ABOUT ADJOURNMENT—SOME OF THE BILLS PASSED OR INTRODUCED.

ALBANY, May 9.—An attempt was made today by Mr. Brooks to get before the House the Hunted's resolution to adjourn finally at noon of May 22. The House is ready to approve it. A strong feeling prevails that this Legislature has done all that good it can accomplish, and that it is possible that more mischief may be done from this time to the adjournment than it is at all wise to permit. The consideration of some of the work done was illustrated to-day, when six notes were sent in by Gov. Robinson. The most important of the batch was the Canal Appropriation bill, in which the Governor discovered many items which he objected to as unnecessary, and, therefore, did not approve them. He vetoed the bill by permit a re-count of the ballots in the Brooklyn election last Fall—a bill designed for the benefit of ex-Assemblyman Worth, who expected by its acceptance to be able to establish his claim to the office of Sheriff of Kings County. While the readiness to adjourn is almost universal, there are a few members who have a desire to prolong the session. When Mr. Brooks suggested that it was a good time to postpone when the final adjournment should take place, he called for the resolution offered by Gen. Husted. Mr. Brooks objected. And, therefore, it did not get before the House.

The Railroad Committee to-day reported adversely Mr. Galvin's bill, which has been in the committee since February, to extend the five-cent fare South on the New-York Elevated Railroad, and to impose a penalty for taking a greater fare. The vote of public meetings and resolutions of the City, Mr. Galvin said, like the report, and he made a vehement and interesting speech against the action of the committee. He made a motion to discharge and give the bill consideration in Committee of the Whole. There had been a dozen meetings on the bill, he said, and the opposition had been officious. Yet, it did not cost a cent for the extension of the railroad companies, and they could certainly afford the interest upon it. Fare on the road had been in operation only 18 months, yet the stock was at 132, the highest in the market, and the Ohio and Mississippi, which is under the five-minute rule, and declared that the time could not be extended. Mr. Galvin objected, suggesting that the House could permit him and the Speaker having put the motion whether Mr. Galvin should go on, there was a unanimous vote for Gen. Husted's motion. Yesterday, Mr. Ferry, Chairman of the Railroad Committee, said the committee had reported the bill adversely, because it had understood that the companies would as soon as possible furnish storage for their cars, of which, of course, and business they did not know it was proper for them to enact any law at this time to affect the fares charged. If the House thought differently, he would cheerfully acquiesce in their decision to consider the bill in Committee of the Whole. Mr. Galvin's motion was carried by a

The Long Island Bridge bill came from the Senate amended, and on a motion by Mr. Grady to concur, a debate arose. Mr. Grady dogedly opposing it. He was supported by the Tammany Democrats. Mr. Fish was at a loss to understand the opposition to the bill in the Senate and House. There had been no reason given for refusing to pass it. Mr. Grady made several delay motions, but Mr. Sloan followed him quickly, overcoming all his attempts to cause delay, and the bill was passed, with only a dozen votes in the negative. There was slight Democratic opposition to the Harris bill to prevent fraudulent voting. Mr. Fish called for the third reading of the bill, and Mr. Grady raised the point of order that it could not be read out of its place, as it had been passed over before March 15. He was reminded that it was a Senate bill, entitled to precedence, and was overruled. Grady appealed from the decision of the Chair, and on Mr. Sloan's motion, Grady's motion for the yeas and nays on the appeal was laid on the table, another call for the yeas and nays on the last motion not being sustained. The bill passed—yeas 74, nays 20. Mr. Glidden, Mr. Brennan, Mr. Ballard, and Mr. Murphy, Republicans, voted with the Democrats. Mr. Glidden did not think the plan suitable, Mr. Brennan was convinced the bill would not accomplish the end its promoter intended it should.

The Senate concurrent resolutions calling for the appointment of a committee to revise the Tax laws and to report to the next Legislature, was considered the morning, and Messrs. Sloan, Brown, and Fish spoke on the motion to concur. Mr. Sloan said that the resolutions were a positive declaration on the part of the Senate not to act this session upon a revision of the law. It therefore appeared to be unwise, impolitic, impracticable, and indiscreet for the Assembly to act. He enlarged upon the importance of the question, of which no one knew the intricacy until they began to study it. A chance so radical as that which should necessary could not be made in a single session. Then had been the report of a committee appointed last Fall, which had found a year scarcely sufficient for the same consideration of it. Mr. Brooks spoke to the same effect, but Mr. Fish did not believe a committee would produce a bill much superior to that prepared by the Ways and Means Committee. The resolution was finally adopted, and the Senate adjourned.

Gen. Sharpe this morning, by unanimous consent, succeeded in sending to the full committee of the Whole three important insurance bills. These were first, "An act to regulate the insurance of policies and the reinsurance thereof by the companies transacting business in this State, and to provide for the better protection of policy-holders in life insurance companies;" and third, amending an act providing the mode of insurance that may be made respectively in insurance corporations under the first and second departments, limiting insurance in the second department to three kinds, and prescribing the conditions upon which the business of horses and live stock shall make no other insurance.

THE SPEAKER LOSES HIS TEMPER.

THREATENING A CORRESPONDENT WITH EXPULSION—WHAT HE OBJECTED TO.

ALBANY, May 9.—The Assemblymen who read THE TIMES on Thursday have commented a good deal on the dispatch from Albany relating to the lobbyists and their work. The scandalous free days permitted these men on the floor has offended many Assemblymen deeply, and there have been many expressions of disapproval, and several resolutions at different times for the enforcement of the fifty-seventh rule. Since the Hurd General Street Railroad bill and the Brennan bill have been under consideration, there has been, on the part of the two sets of lobbyists, who are seeking to kill the bills brought forward by their opponents, an entire disregard both of the rules of the Assembly and of the proprieties that should govern them in their movements about the House. On Thursday, as on any of the 10 days before, the Speaker's room during his absence was occupied by from two to four of the men who are making smooth the way for passing the Hurd or "Jakey" Sharp bill. Occasionally these men would step out to the side of the Speaker's desk, across the House, to inform the Speaker in a low tone which they were interested, and then saunter back to smoke a cigar, or to talk with members who were called in to speak to them. It was supposed that if the Speaker knew these men were there, as everybody else knew it, he would gladly speak to them. So at the end of a speech made by him on Wednesday night, and directed to sunny green and innocuous lobbyists in the front of the house, the suggestion was made that the Speaker probably did not know that at the time the Ohio gentleman had arrived in town and the yellow sitting-place just passed him, where the ladies of the city were used as coffee and smoking-room by "Jakey" Sharp and "Jim" Richmond.

RESULTS OF FANATICISM.

THE MURDER OF EDWIN FREEMAN.

AN ADVENTIST DISCIPLE ATTACKED BY POLICEMEN ON SUNDAY—DETAILS OF TARRING AND FEATHERING—PEOPLE MUCH EXCITED.

COHASSET NARROWS, Mass., May 9.—The Adventist minister Charles Brown is announced to address the Pocasset Adventists on Sunday. The people threaten to tar and feather him and ride him on a rail. Davis, an Adventist, met two young men in the road near his house yesterday, when he drew a knife, took their dating with which he cut one and pelted them to go near his premises. They became frightened and ran away. Davis was much excited. The letter part of the examination was made public. Several Adventists whom it is proposed to arrest as accessories before and after the fact have denied any intention to shield Freeman, and attribute their silence to fears of profaning their faith.

THE WAKEMAN FANATICS.

THREE HORRIBLE MURDERS IN NEW-HAVEN IN 1855—9 BY RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASTS.

NEW-HAVEN, May 9.—The recent murder of little Edith Freeman, in Pocasset, Mass., by her father, and the circumstances surrounding that affair, recall a series of terrible murders in this city, at the end of the year 1855, committed by members of a band of religious fanatics, many of whose tenets and practices were similar to those of the sect to which Freeman belongs. These murders were called the Wakemanite murders, and the circumstances surrounding them were so peculiarly horrible that they are still fresh in the memories of residents of New-Haven.

In 1855 there was in this city a small band of religious fanatics whose leader was Mrs. Rhoda Wakeman, 70 years old. She lived in Beaver-street, near Dixwell-avenue, and was known as a prophetess. She made her followers, who were respectable farmers and farmers' wives, living in the outskirts of the city, believe that, 30 years before, her husband had murdered her in order that she might have an opportunity of visiting heaven. She lay dead for seven hours, she said, during which time she journeyed to heaven, saw the Saviour, the Apostles, the martyrs, and the saints, and was sent back to earth and life by God as a missionary, to prepare the way for the coming of Christ, and to usher in the millennium. At times she claimed to receive messages from God. Her followers were about 15 in number, and they frequently met in her house for prayer and consultation. One of these followers was Justus Matthews, who was about 40 years of age. For some time previous to his murder Matthews had not attended the meetings regularly. His conduct indeed Mrs. Wakeman to announce to her disciples that he was possessed of the evil spirit, and was the "man of sin" of Scripture. The spirit which controlled Matthews, she said, was very annoying to her; it filled her body with grievous pains, and was the greatest obstacle which the coming millennium had to encounter. Moreover, there was danger that it would cause her death, and if she should die a general judgment of all mankind would at once follow, without any millennium. The evil spirit must be removed, and Matthews himself became convinced that Mrs. Wakeman was right about this, and was willing to submit to proper treatment for its removal.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 23, 1855, he visited Mrs. Wakeman's house to see what could be done for him, leaving his wife and family at home. There were gathered in that house that evening the following named Wakemanites, some of whom are still living in or near this city: Mrs. Rhoda Wakeman, Almeron Sanford, and wife, Mr. Matter, being Matthews's father; Abram Sherry, Josiah Jackson, Thankful Hersey, James Woodin, and Samuel Sly, Mrs. Wakeman's half-brother. A prayer-meeting was begun in an upper chamber. When Matthews came, he was put in a room on the ground floor where a fire had been built for his comfort, and he was compelled to strip to be relieved of the evil spirit. That the spirit might be more easily handled, Mrs. Sanford, his sister, blindfolded Matthews with a handkerchief, as he sat in a chair, and bound his hands behind him with a small rope. From 9 o'clock in the evening until 1 o'clock in the morning he remained in this condition, while Mrs. Wakeman and her disciples, in a room above, were in consultation and prayer. At intervals some one would visit him, and beg that he would give up and renounce the evil spirit. Finally, they told him that he must go to bed, for the evil spirit might raise the death of Mrs. Wakeman, and in that way bring upon the world the general judgment. He said he was willing to die, if his death was thought necessary. The prayers in the upper room ceased at 1 A. M., and one of the disciples brought word that the evil spirit would certainly kill Mrs. Wakeman unless Matthews should be killed. Almeron Sanford then examined an axe, and Sly, Woodin, and Jackson went into the room adjoining that where Matthews was sitting. In a short time those up stairs heard blows and screams coming from Matthews's room. Mr. and Mrs. Sanford and Mrs. Hartle went down to see what was the matter, but the doors were locked. Apparently feeling sure that the evil spirit had been removed, they returned to the upper room, and, after a short season of prayer, left the house. Sanford went to Matthews's home, and returned with Matthews's son. They found the doors of the house locked, and the dead body of Matthews lying on the floor. The man's throat had been cut, and in his abdomen were 12 wounds, evidently made with a common table-fork.

The Sheriff was informed of the murder, and all who had been in the house that night were arrested and placed in jail. A Coroner's jury began an inquest the same day, and continued to hear testimony on Christmas Day. On the following day, Samuel Sly confessed to the jury that he had murdered Matthews. He had become convinced, he said, that something must be done to remove the evil spirit. A few days before he had procured a hickory-wood stick, knowing that when used with after-wood it was powerful to remove enchantments. This stick, 1 inch in diameter and 2½ feet long, he hid in the cellar until Sunday night. That night he went into the room where Matthews sat, locked the doors, and struck him on the temple with the stick. Having thus disabled him, he took out his pocket-knife and cut his throat. Then he made the holes in the abdomen with a table-fork, so that the evil spirit could get out. After half an hour he joined Miss Hersey, who washed the blood from his clothes. They burned his bloody shirt, cut the stick in three pieces, and hid it with the knife, in a vault. Then they joined some of the other disciples up stairs in prayer. Mrs. Wakeman unfolded her doctrines to the jury, told them about her visit to heaven, and prophesied that if they were convicted, the world would be at once destroyed. The jury—one of the jurors being John P. Candee, now editor of the Bridgeport Standard—found Sly guilty, and decided that he was insane when the murder was committed. Sly was not hanged because he was adjudged insane. He was confined until his death, which occurred about five years ago.

While in jail Sly confessed unequivocally about his crime, and gave the following reason for it: "The power of all departed spirits since the fall of man had centered in the bosom of Mrs. Wakeman. When Wakeman died this power had gone into Rhoda Gould afterward into Abner Hunt, now a practicing clairvoyant in Fair Haven, who possesses the spirit of Mary Sanford, who died in March last Fall, from whom it had been transferred to Matthews. Upon the death of Matthews the power returned to Sly, and it was Sly's duty to slay the millennium would come in a twinkling of an eye."

But there were to be more horrible tragedies arising from the teachings of Mrs. Wakeman, and the minds of her disciples were so far upon upright upon outside of the little band of fanatics. The next victim was Enoch Sperry, a prominent citizen of New-Haven, and the father of the Hon. A. D. Sperry, for many years Postmaster of New-Haven and at that time Collector of Customs, and now Secretary of State. Enoch Sperry lived on a farm in the town of Woodbridge. On New-Year's Day, (Jan. 1, 1856,) a week after the murder of Matthews, he started to drive into the city. When a short distance from his home he met Charles Sanford, 20 years old, a disciple of Mrs. Wakeman, the nephew of the widow of the murdered Matthews, and also the nephew of Almeron Sanford, who killed Matthews, and who was now living near this city. Young Sanford had an axe on his shoulder. With this, without warning, he struck the old man on the head, burying the blade in his brain. He then took the body from the sleigh and cut its head off. Leaving the remains by the side of the road, he proceeded to the house of another old farmer and fellow-disciple, named Uriah Umbstead. Mistaking him in the house, he passed him in conversation, and suddenly killed him with his axe. Umbstead's head was also cut off. He was then captured, but after a desperate struggle. The epileptic he said, had told him to kill these two old men. Sanford was convicted and sentenced to death. But a fatal attack of smallpox cheated the gallows.

MARTIAL MUSIC AT FUNERALS.

From the Natchez (Miss.) Democrat.

We noticed with satisfaction, yesterday, an innovation made by the Adams Light Infantry in regard to funerals. It will be remembered that before the war, when a funeral was accompanied by a military escort and martial music, it was customary for the military band, when returning from the grave, to strike up lively airs quite in contrast with the sadness of the occasion. Yesterday, however, after all that was mortal of Mr. Peter Burns was consigned to the grave with military honors, the Adams Light Infantry returned to the city with no music save the tapping of the drum. The idea is a good one.

AN OWL BETTER THAN A WATCH-DOG.

From the Providence Press.

Mr. Orin A. Webster, who keeps a lock-smith's shop at No. 200 Broad-street, has reason to congratulate himself for possessing an animal whose services, Friday night, were fully as valuable, if not more so, than an ordinary watch-dog. About 6 o'clock last evening a would-be thief stole around to a side window of Mr. Webster's shop, and effected an entrance by forcing open the window with a jimmy. As soon as he had set inside, however, he met with a warm reception, for the proprietor's owl, which is generally at liberty in the night time, seized upon the intruder, and there ensued quite a scene, music, until at length the man succeeded in making his escape, leaving his hat and the jimmy he used in forcing the window. When Mr. Webster went to the store this morning he had found on the floor, near the window, and other places, the jimmy was covered with blood. The owl's feathers were bloody, as well as his claws, thus showing the faithfulness with which he had defended the property of his master, who searched the store but found that nothing was missing.

A WESTERN "COINCIDENCE."

THE CHANCE ACQUAINTANCES JUDGE L. BRADFORD PRINCE MADE.

From the Denver (Col.) Tribune, May 1.

A somewhat remarkable story, or coincidence, came to the writer well vouched for a short time since, which, as the unusual and somewhat distinguished character in the story is now in Denver for the first time, will be read with interest. The Hon. L. Bradford Prince, a gentleman well and favorably known in New-York politics, was a few months since appointed to the office of Chief Justice of New-Mexico. The Judge had just completed his first records of the District Courts for the State Fe Church, and, as is learned from the Territorial press, with much credit to himself and honor to the Territory. At this writing Judge Prince is registered at the American, and is en route for New-York. Now for the coincidence. After his appointment the new Chief Justice called upon the President and while there met a young lady, who, upon being introduced, immediately made herself known to him as a former resident of the Territory to which he had been appointed, a resident of one of his predecessors in office, and who had died in the Territory while holding the office; but did not enter into any of the details as to the death. However, the witnessed much excitement over the illness and the apparently sound sympathy of the people of the Commissioner in New-Mexico, and expressed a determination to soon return to the Territory on a visit. The Judge quite naturally was much interested in the statements of the young lady, regarded the meeting as fortunate, and improved the colonel time, to speak of the future, himself so far as possible of his new land of duty, which he learned from the interview, as all interviews do, came to an end, leaving the newly appointed officer very favorably and kindly impressed. In a few days Judge Prince reached for his new home. Passing the Big Muddy, he crossed Round Mound and in conversation with a gentleman of intelligence, of the legal profession, from New-Mexico. Again he thanked his lucky star and entered spiritedly into conversation and the posting of himself. Conversation dragging in the long stretch over the great plains the Judge finally asked to shove the cigars, and the conversation drifted to the Territory, and

LOOKING FOR FREE HOMES.

WHY THE BLACKS ARE LEAVING.

SOUTHERN OPPRESSION OF FORMER SLAVES—THE WORK IN ST. LOUIS—THE GENESIS OF THE EXODUS—WHAT IS NEEDED.

ST. LOUIS, May 6.—On the 11th of March last, nearly eight weeks since, an independent Mississippi River packet, the Colorado, landed on the levee of this city about 200 colored persons—men, women, and children—in a semi-destitute condition. This was the commencement of what soon became known here and elsewhere as the Southern exodus. The second body of refugees arrived on the 11th, and within 10 days there were 600 of these people here, poor, half clad, and destitute, wanting to go to Kansas, the land which to them was and is the one of promise. Snow lay on the streets, and the winds were cold. The fugitives, for such they were, hungry and in rags, would have been left starving but for the earnest, almost passionate, charity of their brethren in this city. It is not necessary to dwell upon the feeling aroused by the movement when it thus began; let me, however, undertake to clear away the interested and speculative misrepresentations that have surrounded it, and give in as clear and succinct manner as I can the results of my inquiries into the genesis thereof—the deep-seated causes from which spring such marked and remarkable effects.

In the first place, the migration (it has passed in its character beyond the limitations we understand by the word emigration) still continues with unabated force. This, too, in spite of the systematic obstacles that are now organized to prevent its continuance and to hinder its increase. The first week brought here some 500 souls; the current week has seen as many more land. In all at least 4,300 colored persons have reached St. Louis from the Lower Mississippi region during the period that has elapsed since the first party landed. There are at this date about 300 men, women, and children waiting transportation to Kansas. Of the preceding 4,000 who have arrived here not over 2 per cent have gone elsewhere than to that State.

In the second place it is not true that these refugees are made up almost wholly from the ranks of the more shiftless and indifferent of the colored people living in the section from which they come. I have seen a number of them, and they are fully up to the level of the better and more intelligent portion of the field hands of Mississippi and Louisiana. In fact, I found some of the squad I met to be above that grade. I am assured by the active colored men connected with the relief work that it has been a surprise to them to find that so many of these people are originally from the border States, Missouri especially. In this latter fact may be found the germinal idea which is now blossoming into the desire for life and homes in Kansas. The refugees are a fair average of the working people of Northern Louisiana and Southern Mississippi.

In the third place, three-fifths at least of those who have already arrived are from a limited section of one State—the cotton-growing parishes of Northern Louisiana. Whether of little or much significance, this fact remains, that the parishes now being depleted and threatened with industrial depopulation are the group that, owing to the preponderance of colored citizens, have heretofore been Republican in politics, and which have, as a result, as the undenied evidence establishes, been most savagely bull-dozed by the White League Democracy. The massacre of Tensas last Fall bears fruitage now in the voluntary efforts at removal on the part of the laboring people who have been so oppressed. Let this fact be borne steadfastly in mind, for it is the key-note of the situation. We shall never fully realize the importance of the movement nor its progress until we reach the underlying motives.

In the next place—and this will be established to the satisfaction of all unprejudiced and uninterested persons—there is now a deliberate determination to prevent the continuance of this migration. Here in St. Louis the mercantile class, commission merchants, and cotton brokers, all, in fact, who deal with the cotton and sugar section, desire to prevent the exodus. Public feeling among the well-to-do discourages its continuance. Such aid as the relief committee have received in St. Louis has largely been anonymous, donors objecting to give their names. Of nearly $4,500 received by the Relief Committee up to the date of my inquiries, no more than some from elsewhere than in St. Louis, or even in Missouri. The colored citizens here are doing their whole duty; but their contributions are largely unexpended, so far as a balance-sheet is concerned, because in the main their charity has been given in the form not of cash paid in hand, but of food, clothing, shelter, and, above all, of loving kindness and deep charity, from which a sympathetic encouragement has flowed that must be very grateful to these rude and suffering sons and daughters of the soil. Let it not be understood that the colored people of this city as a body have in any way sought to organize or encourage this migration. They wisely understand, as the leaders say, the great difficulties that attend it, but they would be worse than inhuman if they declined to aid with such charity as they can give those of their people who are fleeing from bondage. Perhaps their attitude cannot be put any more forcibly than was done by the Rev. John Turner, now Treasurer of the Emigrant Relief Association, and until within a week the Chairman of the Relief Committee first formed. In an interview with the Mayor he pleaded for assistance to the emigrants from a fund left by the late Mr. Mullanphy for intending Western settlers. The Mayor is ex officio a member of the board intrusted with disbursing this fund, and his concurrence is necessary for any appropriation. When Mr. Turner asked for a small amount the strain on the resources of the colored helpers was severe, and very little outside aid had been received. The destitute persons were of the class for whom the fund had been endowed—intending Western emigrants. The Mayor, however, undertook to make conditions with Mr. Turner before he would approve a grant. He insisted that encouragement had been given, and wanted Mr. Turner, who is essentially a representative man, to promise that he would do what he could to discourage it. Evidently, the intention was to require, if possible, some public act of advice on the colored leader's part, whose effect might be to hinder and impede the migration. The Mayor was strenuous in the expression of his belief that the movement had received an impulse from the outside. This belief, which seems to have been the prevailing feeling here among the whites at all interested in the matter, Mr. Turner assured him was without foundation so far as his knowledge extended; that the efforts making in St. Louis were wholly directed to relief, and had no similar, political, or other motive which the most pronounced Bourbon could properly object to. But he also assured the Mayor that in no way would he or his people refrain from aiding their brethren, oppressed and in distress, whose hands were outstretched in supplication and whose needs it was necessary to supply. What touched the cold and indifferent offices the most was the suggestion that it would be better to aid removal than to permit, by a refusal of help, any portion of them to become a charge on the city. So, finally, $150 was appropriated from the Mullanphy fund. No other appeal has since been made to the authorities in any such shape, and I have yet to learn of any municipal aid having been extended to these deserving people. I have cited this incident because it illustrates the negative phase of hostility. But there is an active phase which is supplementing the efforts now being made all along the Lower Mississippi to prevent an increase of the exodus. I have conversed with colored men of intelligence, sent here to represent the wishes of over 2,000 persons now encamped on the river's bank in Northern Louisiana. I have talked with a keen-witted lady, who was an active Confederate sympathizer, and who has just returned from a two-months' tour in the very region affected by the exodus, visiting as editor of a paper published in the interests of Southern agriculture, 128 different points. I have talked with gentlemen engaged in the river transportation business, as well as with others who are largely engaged in Southern trade. I have read a great many private letters from the section affected. As a result of my inquiries, I am fully satisfied that the colored exodus is, so far as it has now progressed, the result of a deep-seated, intense, and spontaneous movement on the part of the negro migrationists themselves. It springs from two simple and direct causes, the foremost being a deep-seated belief that the white people of the South have determined to deprive them of the rights of citizenship, of the privileges of the ballot, of the courts, and of the free schools. The men and women who have shrunk back and those who are seeking to follow them from Northern Louisiana and Southern Mississippi and Arkansas, have done and are still doing so, under the belief that the end of the struggle, if they remain, will be either absolute degradation by their complete submission or destruction by their resistance to the ruffianism which they charge now rides over them. One of them tersely expressed this feeling by saying, "When we was were owned, our masses cared for us, 'cause we were his property; now masse and his friends wants we uns to be slaves of 'ciety and no one cares for us." Another said: "We wants to live among people who think freedom, not among those who have to struggle to do so. We know there are prejudices against us in the Northern States, but we prefer to live where people will be angry if we don't send our children to school, and we wish not to remain where they are furious at us whenever we do." A second reason for the exodus is the trouble about labor and its pay. These refugees all unite in declaring, more or less clearly, that the combination of political and selfish prejudices which operates against them tends most distinctly to make them political parishs, civic outcasts, and industrial pecus. They are systematically kept in debt, and so practically enslaved. All the statements made about the railroads of Kansas and other States having sent agents South are utterly without foundation, so far as seeking to encourage colored emigration is concerned. I found refugees yesterday examining the ordinary land prospectuses of the Kansas Pacific Railroad with great curiosity. These were the first they had ever seen. I have asked all with whom I have conversed if they had ever seen any railroad or emigration agents, circulars, or lithographs. They all replied in the negative. All the members of the Relief Committee and others I have met here say they have seen no evidence of such efforts. Mr. Singleton, of Tennessee, the colored man who for some years past has been engaged in organizing farm colonies of his people in Kansas, says he has never acted as an agent for the railroads or other owners of land in Kansas, nor has he encouraged any movement like the present exodus in any such shape or form. These and other evidences are convincing that no effort has been made by Western landowners or transportation corporations to organize this exodus. Yet Southern men and papers talk of emissaries being in the South striving to remove their labor. It is certain that no outside pressure has been exerted to make this strange exodus an astounding fact. This spontaneity is the key-note.

When rightly appreciated it will do two things: Deepen the public knowledge of the almost indelible social crimes and evil influences slavery has left behind, and greatly increase the general respect for the mass of the Southern colored people. As to the fact that Kansas is regarded by the refugees as their chief place of security, that is clearly another phase of the Nemesis which follows the South. A very considerable element of the freed people of the valley region affected by the exodus were formerly from the border States. The Missouri slaves taken South before or during the war knew in their way all about the struggle for freedom in Kansas. Hence, they naturally turn to it as their city of refuge.

The exodus will go on, though not at present in as large a volume as would be the case if there were not very strenuous means of hindering now being taken. Not less than 3,000 people are now encamped at different points, chiefly below Vicksburg, for about 100 miles. The river boats refuse, as a rule, to bring them North. A few get on at different landings, but the main bodies remain, declaring they will not go back. Every sort of pressure has been brought to bear on the steam-boat Captains to induce them not to make certain landings. The refugees who are now arriving out here on the regular packet lines, which are strong enough to withstand a little pressure. The single packets and independent lines have to succumb. Yet it was these that at first brought the larger number. All sorts of means are employed to prevent the people's departure. They are threatened with violence, they are arrested under pretense of debt, and their stock or other property taken; they are detained under pretense of violating contracts made to labor for the current year, and they are refused supplies, even when able to purchase. There is reason to fear that a collision will occur, for the more determined will not go back, and the Hotspurs who seek to compel them will be resisted. One of the wisest things that could be done would be to hire and send down the Mississippi packets enough to bring away the people waiting on the river banks. It could be made to pay the Ohio River boatmen who would undertake it.

So far as I have been able to discover, the money contributed has been faithfully expended, but there is need of more and continuous assistance. The colored relief at the point, the centre of operations, has wisely been confined to relieving distress and helping the refugees onward. I find that up the 3d of May the committee have received in money $4,974 61, and has expended all but $178 28. Two boxes of clothing and also been received. Doubtless the value of supplies, shelter, food, &c., furnished here by colored citizens would add at least $2,000 to the total. The greater portion of the money has been expended for transportation, about $4,000 having been paid out to the Missouri River Packet Company for the carriage of the refugees to Kansas. The expenses incurred direct will not exceed in value over $350.

There is need of more comprehensive organization. A financial committee is talked of to receive funds and transfer the money to such relief or other agencies as may be determined upon. The relief work is well managed. It should be supplemented by two other committees—one to receive applications for labor and also to find avenues therefor, and the other to classify and distribute the labor as it arrives. There are many applications for laborers in neighboring States. If Eastern sympathizers will organize a National Emigrant Aid Society, and send an agent to cooperate with the workers here, a great work will be accomplished. Sooner or later these people are bound to come to the North and West by the tens of thousands. A good organization will prevent distress and aid their judicious distribution. They are wanted in Southern Colorado, the Indian Territory, New-Mexico, and Arizona. In California they can find work, and in Utah, Kansas, Nebraska, and Wyoming. Let us help them wisely. R. J. H.

OLD HICKORY'S THANKS.

THE SARCASTIC LETTER HE WROTE A WHIG FIRM.

From the Boston Transcript.

Not long after Gen. Jackson's retirement from the Presidency a rumor got abroad that he was bankrupt. This was too good a chance of banter for the Whigs, whose detestation of Old Hickory followed him to his retreat at the Hermitage, to neglect. A Whig firm in Cincinnati, taking ironical pity on the old hero, pasted two cents together, inserted two of the large, old-fashioned copper cents between them, and inclosed them in an unpaid letter to the ex-President, full of mock condolence. The postage on the letter was 76 cents, which Gen. Jackson, not knowing what was within, promptly paid. He at once sat down and penned a characteristic reply, inclosing the two cents back to his would-be persecutors. This ready they did not see fit to take out of the Post Office, and it found its way to the Dead Letter Office at Washington. The original is now in the possession of Mr. George M. Towle. It is full of Old Hickory's gruff, sarcastic humor, as well as his bad spelling and grammar, as will be seen:

HERMITAGE, May 11, 1837.

GENTLEMEN: Your kind letter, conveying your charity of two copper cents, which you forwarded on hearing that I was broke, and a bill drawn by me for $6,000 had been returned, protested, has been received; and, as you have been imposed upon by the vile falsehoods that are daily circulated by the Whigs, your kind charity is herewith returned to you, that you may dispose of it, in charity, to such of the Whigs that may have been employed in trading in stocks and land, and in swindling the poor. Have the goodness to inform all your friends that I have not drawn a draft for any sum, on any one, for twenty years, nor have I any use for your kind charity, having long since learned to live within my own means. Your charity is, therefore, returned to you in the same envelope you sent it, supposing, from the material and great care taken, it is your only charity repository, and the objects of charity in your city would be much injured if not returned to you.

Your mo. obt. servt., till death, ANDREW JACKSON.

POETICAL TRIBUTE TO SHAKESPEARE.

The Stratford-upon-Avon correspondent of the London Standard, in giving an account of the opening of the commemorative exercises on Shakespeare's birthday, says of Dr. Westland Marston's poetical address, that it was "delivered in an admirable manner by Miss Kate Field. After a brief introduction the author glances, in a few happily-expressed lines, at the characterization of Shakespeare's most familiar plays, and the address concludes thus:

"Imperial mind that wears o'er the diadem
Of all our being, and each separate gem—
Of human mind—in thee, vast being, combine—
Kings of earth's kingly spirits, who dost shine
In thy complete sun-scale, beyond compare,
Without an ancestor, without an heir,
From us thou needest nought. The worshipper
Who cast colored the sun might not center
On him and added rays—nor we on thee!
Yet we a grace in our humanity
To show in outward forms the inward sense
That genius wakes of love or reverence,
And when the narrow heart would check the sign
Of these high promptings, they themselves decline.

"Therefore to Avon's banks, where oft he fared
In boyhood, where his willing steps repaired—
He's a pilgrim, yet a soldier—to-day we come,
In his poet's birth-place raise the poet's home,
And give him here (though wide as earth his fame)
'A local habitation and a name!'"

THE OUTLOOK FROM PARIS.

SOCIAL FESTIVITY AND POLITICAL TROUBLE.

A CHARITY BALL—BLANQUI'S ELECTION AND ITS CONSEQUENCES—THE CONTEST WITH NIHILISM—THE ALL-PREVADING CONSPIRACY IN RUSSIA.

PARIS, April 28.—Paris being always disposed to charity, especially when amusements can be combined with benevolence, gave a great ball on Friday last at the Hotel Continental, in aid of the sufferers of Scacedin. It was to have been splendid, likewise select, as the tickets cost 20 francs each, only to be obtained from some one of the lady patronesses, who were chosen from the richest social cream; also severely personal, which last regulation, if really enforced, induces the reflection that the committee has peculiar notions as to the meaning of the word "select," for at least one-half of the guests belonged to the skimmed milk strata, and, of the balance, sour curds were in a vast majority. The grandes dames kept severely to themselves on rows of velvet chairs in the embrasures of windows, never deigning to go on the floor, and protected against all intrusion by stately ushers, who waved away any tired creatures venturing to approach a vacant seat. Three heathen Chinese in pale blue gowns and pig-tails, undoubtedly exotic, were the only distinguished persons who looked as if they liked it as they wandered through the gilded halls; unsolicited beings also wandered about disconsolately, seeking rest and finding none, being equally unsuccessful at the refreshment table, except in the instances of those wise virgins who came early and staid late, only yielding their places reluctantly and with a sigh to friends, by whom everything was gobbled up long before midnight, when the swells began to arrive. Mrs. Downing had given a fancy ball on the preceding evening, where people had danced until broad daylight, so that the usual galaxy of American beauty was absent, and, naturally also, handsome toilets were rarer, although, even without our countrywomen, there were a few of those generally distinguished by extreme length of train and economy of bodice, which must have been because their charitable wearers wanted to give away the price of the material in alms. The halls were fitfully lighted, with Jablochkoffs, presenting delightful alternations of illumination and gloom, the latter at one moment lapsing into utter darkness. As I have spoken of the supper-room, I must next notice the species of inner vestibule known as the winter garden, which was tastefully arranged with plants and ferns so as to represent a subaqueous grotto, and that the resemblance should be more complete, a clever mechanism of the sky-light allowed little streams to purl down along the walls, while crystal drops plashed from the glass above into puddles on the floor. As a scenic effect this was a happy feature of the festival, but a few of those systematic cavillers, who are never satisfied with anything, grumbled and pretended that you might just as well be in the Aquarium of the Trocadéro on a rainy day. I have so often told of the beauties of French dancing that I would not refer to it again if it were not that the natives have adopted the Boston—a foreign edition of the Boston—so that the performances were more than usually heterogeneous. However, the floor not being highly polished, and no members of the official world present, the number of casualties were certainly not 10 per cent of what we are accustomed to witness at the Ministerial balls, whither the guests are fetched from those political highways and byways in which the choreographic art is learned at home from that clever treatise by the celebrated terpsichorean authority M. Calinos, "Dancing in Twelve Easy Lessons Without a Master." And I was right glad to mark also a decided improvement in shirt-fronts, cleaner and less crumply than they are worn at the Presidential receptions, and that there was less struggling with gloves, whence I concluded that the wearers of this article were more used to them. Of diamonds, the display was not extensive, nor did many stars and crosses provoke the sneers of those who have got none of these gewgaws, but it is the greatest mistake in the world to imagine that the Duchess of La Rochefoucauld and the Austrian Ambassador, or staid away altogether, they did not give their tickets to their chamber-maids as they did at Versailles, and they contributed nobly with their purses, for the receipts amounted to 60,000 francs, and the committee, paying from its own pocket the 35,000 francs of expenses, the entire sum has been remitted to the Count de Beust to be applied to the relief of the victims of the Hungarian freshet.

THE BLANQUI TROUBLE.

Strange to say, not one member of the Government was present, but then the Government, which means the Administration, has a monstrous deal to do at home, not only in the way of charity to returning exiles, but politically, for it is in hot water with the Radicals, by whom the Blanqui "incident" has been transformed into a Blanqui "question," about which debate will be hot and strong, after the Assembly resumes its labors. The Cabinet is much exercised concerning the approbation by the Legislature of the Bordeaux election, for the Ministry's positive refusal to amnesty the old revolutionary may or may not be supported by a majority in the Chamber. If it does, the vote will be tantamount to an expression of want of confidence, which must be followed by resignation; and if it is, the Girondins will elect their pet candidate again and again, until the agitation be made general, and the prisoner of Clairvaux becomes another "providential man of destiny," against whom it will be worse than folly to contend, and here again the Cabinet's withdrawal to private life is the enforced sequel. Nobody really cares for Blanqui personally, but his name is a convenient banner, and under it will be fought the contest for the real cause at stake—plenary and unconditional amnesty, to include even the ringleaders of the Commune. At present the Administration shows its teeth, and as it prosecuted the Révolution Française last week, for outrages against religion, so now it prosecutes this dirty sheet for its publication of a letter of congratulation to the chief editor, signed by "A group of Widows, Sisters, and Mothers, Victims of the Army of Versailles." This letter in itself is trash, but its appearance, without one word of commentary, shows that M. Sigismond Lacroix, and his clique have espoused the cause of the Commune, and that the establishment of the Commune is the objective of the Radicals' campaign. Everything depends upon the prompt and decisive action of the Government; it seems to have the game in hand, but the Ministers are of very small calibre, and quite capable of one of those faults from which political honor never recovers. If they should commit it, I will not say that I despair of the Republic, but I will repeat, with the Republican Soir: "We think it quite time that Independent Republicans should seek means for its salvation."

The foreign press is severe in its opinions of this Bordeaux election, and even those journals which affect the most sympathy for France express their doubts that the existing régime is "strong enough to check the progress of the revolution." It is this phrase, indeed, which furnishes the key-note to their pessimist forebodings. For all monarchical Europe, the existence of a Republic is a constant threat against monarchical institutions, and, in the opinion of the Cabinets of Austria, Germany, and Russia, the attempts of Hoedel, Nobiling, Monoasi, Passanante, and Solovieff would not have been made without as least implied encouragement from French Radicals. It is most unfair, of course, to tax the entire party with such a horrible charge as would be the approval of the principle of regicide, and yet its organs scarcely attempt to conceal their satisfaction at the news that agitation is on the increase in Russia, notwithstanding Gen. Gourko's imitation of the reign of terror instituted 18 years ago in Warsaw. The Czar, contrary to the habits of his life, never leaves his palace now without an escort, and, perhaps fearing that even this precaution may be insufficient, perhaps to avoid witnessing the results of the Draconian ukase, has gone to Livadia, whence he will visit Berlin and Ems, and probably not return to his capital until its Augean stables be quite cleansed of Nihilism, a task infinitely more herculean than ought ever attempted by Alcides.

DEALING WITH NIHILISM.

Gen. Gourko has thought to convert the concierge of every dwelling-house into a Police auxiliary, never seeming to remember that, as the regular Police force is already strongly tainted with Nihilism, this enrollment of amateurs, of whose opinions and belongings little except most vaguely can be known, may merely serve to aid in spreading the contagion. The revolutionary party has overcome so many difficulties already that it will laugh to scorn the edicts of Gen. Gourko, whose severity will certainly produce results, but it is by no means sure in the direction anticipated by the Government. M. Kachoff, the great Russian journalist, thinks that the measures adopted are too lenient, and that the creation of military Governors is incomplete without some extraordinary central authority to direct and systematize their several actions against the resistance of the population. This resistance will be, as a rule, passive; isolated outrages will continue under the direction of the Executive Committee of Twelve, of whom one leading member was Lieut. Dobrovin, recently arrested for the murder of a Police agent near Novgorod. But there is not the real danger; the committee will be forwarded out and shot, and terror might extinguish terror after a time, yet how combat the movement of disorganization which has already begun to be manifested in the resignations of the Semstvos—provincial assemblies—of military officers, and among the civil employees of the Government? All the educated classes are more or less discontented; on account of fear or want of sympathy, the Czar cannot count upon their support, and nothing but the most terrible consequences may be expected should he, as many apprehend, appeal to the popular masses, whose brutal instincts can be only too easily awakened, as was seen at Moscow last year in the butchers' attacks upon the students.

THE WIDE-SPREAD INFECTION.

Meanwhile assassination goes on unceasingly; shells are thrown from the upper-story windows of houses by women recruited among that most abandoned class of females, the students of the university; a young officer is stabbed in the back in broad daylight on the Newsky Perspective; the Archangel Chief of Police is found dead in his bed, with the stereotyped "Death to Traitors" pinned to his bosom by a dagger; three officers are killed and one wounded at Kieff, and of the four assassins, taken red-handed, one is a nobleman, another a beautiful girl of 17, belonging to an excellent family of that Province; in a theatre at Poltava pistols are fired at and by the Police, which had stopped the performance of a drama, "Nathalie in Poltava;" at Kharkoff the Professors of the university have collectively protested against the measures of military organization prescribed by the Government, and are to be replaced by importations from the Slav schools of Austro-Hungary; in Odessa an insurrection is feared at any moment. Everywhere the revolutionary caldron is bubbling and seething until the moment shall be judged propitious for a general explosion. And yet the authorities are not idle. As early as the 16th April all the jails of Petersburg were cleared of their inmates, who were sent to provincial fortresses to make room for new prisoners. Arrests en masse have begun; not only individuals, but whole families have been taken, as in the case of the man Arsenief, a clerk at the Ministry of the Interior, with whom were arrested his mother, father, two sons, and two daughters, on the charge of serving as intermediaries for the subscription to, and distribution of, the revolutionary newspaper, Land and Liberty. Two thousand persons are said to be in the prisons and forts in and around the capital, and as the journals are forbidden to give details of the Government's acts, or to criticize its policy, we can merely imagine what is going on in the provinces, where foreign correspondents are not permitted to circulate. Only the Vienna Neue Freie Presse manages to obtain some information, as it did during the campaign on the Danube, where its representative, although refused permission to follow the Army, was always in advance, in authentic intelligence, of apparently more favored reporters, because then, as probably now, he received notes from every individual hostile to the Russian cause, and not devoting his energies, as did the English press men, entirely to the fabrication of "news of startling interest," so told the truth in all its naked ugliness that any price was offered for the revelation of his name, which I have reason to believe was Legion. He or they may be considered quite as trustworthy now, and the recitals given in the columns of this independent organ are so fraught with interest that I will venture to quote passages which may serve to explain the exceeding difficulty to be encountered by the Russian Government in its attempt to cure this wide-spread social evil:

"The revolutionary organization is divided into a great number of 'sections,' each composed of from 10 to 15 members, and acting independently of the others, under the direction of its particular Starosta, so that, should one section be discovered through treachery, or by the arrest of an adept, the others may still continue their operations. The names of the directing board are constantly changed; they hold their meetings occasionally in some public locality, but more often at private houses. All the 'sections' are under the orders of a 'General,' who, from time to time communicates, unknown, by whistles, may recognize each other, but every 'section' has the right to pass sentence of death upon dangerous or suspected individuals, and all are furnished with the means of cultivating the intimacy of the highest circles of imperial society. One of the most efficient means for this purpose is the initiation of females belonging to the Nihilist conspiracy, as governesses, in wealthy families or in those of Government functionaries, who often, through fear of compromising their daughters, willingly shut their eyes to revolutionary solicitations of which they have full cognizance. One example of this may be cited: Last November, Gen. Samoyoff, who resides at Kharkoff, engaged as governess for his only child the sister of a notorious Nihilist, arrested shortly afterward for participation in a student's riot. The teacher insinuated her brother's doctrines in the mind of her pupil—the father knew it, but was afraid to interfere, and finally was obliged, under penalty of denunciation to the Police, to use all his influence to obtain the release of the prisoner, which he did upon the receipt of an anonymous letter informing him that his daughter's desk was filled with compromising documents, an assertion proving, upon examination, to be correct."

Similar incidents to this occur every day—sometimes in the immediate surroundings of the Emperor, who feels that he can trust no one, and that his most faithful instruments can only grope blindly in the dark. How it will end, no one can predict; if the conspirators had a programme, concessions to liberal ideas might be a remedy, but while the Nihilists say that they do not want what exists, they decline to offer any substitute except that species of indefinite chaos from which we dare not hope that any light can come. It is impossible to hang or transport to Siberia the entire population of the Empire, and, in the existing situation, there is a strong probability of taking into account not but the mere agents of this mysterious association, whose directing minds enjoy impunity. The plot has been skillfully woven, and even the joint action of the three sovereigns of three mighty Empires will be insufficient to check the contagion of Socialism, so long as its leaders are at liberty, either because it is not known who they are, or because they are allowed to develop their schemes and issue their orders under the protection of the laws of those countries which, like England and Switzerland, will not give up a regicide, because he is a political criminal, as if King-killing was a less heinous crime than the murder of a private citizen. The extreme weakness of the Bourse in all descriptions of foreign securities, except Hungarian bonds, bought up as a profitable investment by small capitalists, is an indication of the want of confidence among financiers in a peaceful and satisfactory settlement of the many questions still pending. The Nihilists have depreciated Russian funds; nobody will lend a penny to bankrupt Turkey, with the odds at forty to one that, within a fortnight after the Russians shall have gone north of the Balkans, all the territory to the south will be in insurrection from Novi-Bazar to Adrianopolis; and as Lord Salisbury and M. Waddington cannot agree upon any course of action against the rebellious Khedive, Egyptian creditors are painfully alive to the certainty that, if they do get a part of their coupons cashed in May, this will be the last time that they can hope to see the color of their money. Garibaldi, too, is becoming troublesome, and from his recent speeches and his heading of a subscription "to purchase 1,000,000 rifles for the nation." I am strengthened in my conviction that fine weather will be accompanied by a campaign either against the monarchy or against Austria, the first, for choice.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN AND COTTON MARKETS.

LIVERPOOL, May 9.—A leading grain circular says: "The grain markets have been steadier this week, and many of the provincial markets have slightly improved. Wheat was in better demand, and considerable business was done in this and in neighboring markets. Since Tuesday wheat has improved 1d. per cental. At this market to-day there was a moderate attendance and a better demand for wheat. An advance of 1d. to 2d. was established over Tuesday's rates. Flour was firmer, but unchanged. Corn advanced 1d., but buyers do not pay the advance freely."

This week's circular of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers' Association says: "The cotton market was animated throughout the week, with a large business, and although quieter on Thursday, quotations generally advanced. American was in large demand, and the current qualities advanced ¾d. Sea Island was in good general demand, and, with a limited supply, advanced ½d. to 1d. Futures were strong and active until Tuesday, and advanced ¾d. On Wednesday and Thursday, with considerable desire to sell, they declined 3-16d. The final rates show an advance of 3-16d."

STRIKERS THREATENING MURDER.

BRAZIL, Ind., May 9.—The mining trouble is not over yet. Last night, J. W. Booher, a miner, was stopped by three masked men with a rope, who threatened to hang him unless he stopped work. He agreed to do so. They also shot through the window of William Elder's house in Staunetown, but did no damage to any person. The strikers have given notice several men to stop work or they should be killed. They say Elder must die. Some person entered the house of an old man working for Mr. Mibleck and robbed him of all his provisions. Everything is quiet to-day.

MISCELLANEOUS CITY NEWS

THE SUMMER EXCURSIONS.

WHO GET THEM UP, WHAT THEY COST, AND HOW THEY ARE MANAGED.

Although the first of the excursions, of which numbers leave this City on every pleasant day in Summer, will not be undertaken for some weeks, yet much of the preliminary business of these short pleasure-trips has been already accomplished, and plans have been made for months ahead. Excursions by water have, of course, been popular ever since New-York was settled; for no city in the world has a greater number of delightful suburban resorts within a radius of 50 miles, and easily accessible by water. But while the excursions of years ago were small affairs, in which a dozen or twenty persons went a few miles down the Bay or up the rivers in sail-boats, and were often much embarrassed by head-winds or calms, the excursionists of to-day are numbered by thousands, and are transported in great barges towed by steam-tugs or in swift saloon steamers, to either of which calms or head-winds are matters of comparative indifference. The decks of the barges or steamers afford ample room for dancing when the excursionists feel so inclined; roofs or awnings protect alike from rain or hot sun, and the length of the sail undertaken in going to and returning from the picnic grounds is often 100 miles, amid the most beautiful and interesting scenery. The great double-decked barges that are now so popular and generally used are institutions of some 20 years' standing. During the Centennial Summer, three years ago, the excursion business received an impetus that it has felt ever since, and this season promises to see a greater number of merry picnic parties afloat than there were in any previous year. The excursion business of this City is in the hands of three firms, of which Commodore John Starin, with his great fleet of steamers, barges, and tugs, takes the lead. Each of these firms also owns or leases islands, groves, or picnic grounds of some description up the Hudson, in the Sound, or in the Bay, and whoever engages a certain resort must also engage transportation to it from the company interested in it. Just now the excursion offices are busy places, and the agents are engaged in consultation with Sunday-school Superintendents, self-important committees from coteries and associations, Presidents of singing societies, officers of lodges, military organizations, and dozens more, each intent upon securing the best day, the most roomy barges, and the most beautiful resort for his constituents. So anxious are some of them to secure certain days that they made engagements for them as early as February, and already Commodore Starin's book shows engagements of steamers, barges, and groves for every day from the 1st of June until the middle of September. Last year the majority of excursions went up the Hudson; but such unusual attractions are offered in Long Island Sound for this season that half of the parties will go to the beautiful groves skirting the shores of the Sound. The first excursion of this season will go up the Hudson on the 30th of this month, and the last for which arrangements have thus far been made is to be on the 14th of September. Among the excursions projected is one of the members of a battery, who will go to Albany, carrying three days on the trip, and "camping out" on board the steamer during that period. Although the selecting of one day in Summer and expecting it to be pleasant is very much like investing in a lottery ticket and expecting it to draw a prize, most of the committees seem to have perfect faith that the particular days selected by them will prove all that they desire. June is the favorite month with Sunday-school Superintendents, most of whom seem to be of one mind, and to have had to think that "then, if ever, come perfect days," and on the Commodore's books are four or five engagements per day for every day except Sundays during that month, and nearly all of these have been made for Sunday-schools.

The average price of a barge and tug is $100 for a day, and as each of the boats will accommodate about 1,000 persons this price reduces the cost of transportation per person to a very low figure. In some of the churches these excursions are made to answer the same purpose as fairs or festivals, and by charging 50 cents or $1 a ticket for the excursion a respectable sum is often netted and turned into the treasury of the church or Sunday-school. As the amusements are almost always of the class which remains in, to use a nautical term, during Summer, the most of these outings, and probably no merrier, happier throngs are ever gathered than those which sail away on the great picnic boats in the early Summer mornings and come home singing and with bands playing, at sunset, or when the rivers are illuminated by moonlight. Of all pleasures, none are productive of more pleasure than those annually given by Commodore Starin to the newsboys of the City and to members of the Police forces and their families.

STREET-CLEANING MATTERS.

PROPOSALS FOR RECEIVING THE GARBAGE—POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE INSPECTOR.

At the meeting of the Board of Police yesterday, the proposal of ex-Judge Hilton, to receive from the Police Department all the street-sweepings, ashes, and garbage collected by the Bureau of Street-cleaning, was brought up for action, and after being discussed by the Commissioners was referred to the Committee on Street-cleaning. A proposal from William A. Hyell, of No. 42 John-street, was received, and also referred to the Committee on Street-cleaning. Mr. Hyell proposes to receive all the street-sweepings, ashes, and garbage collected by the Street-cleaning Bureau, to be delivered to him at Schieffelin's Dock, Newtown Creek, the ashes, if not all wanted at that point, to be delivered within four miles of the Battery, and he agrees to unload all the boats and cars at his own cost and expense, provided the contract is for a term of three or five years. A communication was received from the Counsel to the Corporation giving it as his opinion that the salaries of policemen detailed as dump inspectors must be paid from the appropriation for Police salaries, and not from the street-cleaning appropriation.

A resolution was adopted directing the Superintendent to report to the board at its next meeting the names of all patrolmen in the service of the Street-cleaning Bureau who are fit for street-cleaning and detailed, and other patrolmen not able to do patrol duty to take the places of the able-bodied men. Capt. Gunner, Inspector of Street-cleaning, asked to have the resolution directing that the ashes, garbage, and street-sweepings be delivered to Thomas O'Rourke rescinded, and presented a long communication in support of his asking an extension of time to the 14th inst., to receive the material. Both communications were referred to the Committee on Street-cleaning. A communication was received from Capt. Gunner asking the board to define his powers and those of the Inspector of Street-cleaning under section 67, of chapter 335 of the Laws of 1873.

Commissioner Smith offered a resolution requesting the Counsel to the Corporation to inform the board as to the powers and duties of the Inspector of Street-cleaning under the section referred to. This resolution was adopted, Commissioners MacLean voting in the negative. The Chief Clerk was directed to furnish the Controller with the facts in relation to the suit of Coleman Ripley & Brother against the City growing out of the failure of the Police Commissioners to award that firm the contract for street-sleaning about a year ago.

PRESENTMENTS AGAINST PUBLIC OFFICERS.

Among the presentments handed up by the Hudson County Grand Jurors, at their adjournment last Wednesday, was one against the Hoboken Board of Education. It sets forth that from the evidence before the Grand Jury it appears that a majority of the board were guilty of gross favoritism in appointing teachers who were debarred by State and local laws from filling such positions, their examinations showing in some instances an average of but 50 per cent, when the law requires an average of 70 or 80 per cent. Other presentments are against the Hoboken City Canvassers for failing to comply with the law in regard to the election of City Tax Commissioners, against the condition of the Hoboken cemetery, and recommending greater care in the granting of licenses for the sale of liquor.

THE LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE.

It was unusually quiet along the piers on the North River yesterday, and only a small number of the striking longshoremen made their appearance on West-street. The new hands continued at their work all day without being molested in any way. The Baltic will leave this morning on time, and the Canada, the State of Pennsylvania, and the Devonia will follow during the day. The latter vessel will not leave her dock until 5 o'clock this afternoon. The departure of The Queen, of the National line, has been postponed until to-morrow morning, and it is probable that the Australia, of the Anchor Line, will also be delayed. The City of Brussels came up to the Inman pier early yesterday, and the work of unloading her was begun at once. There is a difference of opinion between the steam-ship people and the strikers as to whether the vessels advertised to sail next week will get off on time or not. Both sides are still determined to hold out, and neither has proposed any compromise as yet.

STILL FUSSING WITH THE SUNDAY LAW.

Chief of Police Meldrum, of Newark, N. J., yesterday sent out to all proprietors of cigar stores, oyster saloons, and confectionery shops a notice directing them to keep their places closed on Sunday, under penalty of a fine of $10. The notice was not sent to saloon-keepers, it being taken for granted that they understand the law fully. The Police have received instructions to make complaints against all dealers who do not comply with the law and the notice. It is understood that the barbers will keep open.

A WAITER TURNS BURGLAR.

Wesley Price, a colored waiter, formerly employed by Mrs. Flora G. Boles, of No. 29 West Twenty-third-street, was arraigned before Justice Kaunitz, in the Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, on a charge of burglary. The crime consists in his having stolen, as alleged, $200 worth of furs and clothing belonging to Mrs. J. G. Johnston, a guest of Mrs. Boles. Entrance to the house was effected through the coal-hole in the front area, which, it is said, Price "fixed" before he left Mrs. Boles's employ. Mrs. Johnston's property was stored in trunks in the cellar, and these the negro broke open with a hatchet which he is said to have stolen from a hardware store. Thirteen pawn tickets, representing $1,00 worth of the stolen property, were found in Price's possession at the time of his arrest. He was committed for trial in default of $500 bail.

The Signal Service Bureau report indicates for to-day, in this region, south to east winds, slightly warmer, clear or hazy weather.

The Senate yesterday passed the bill "to prohibit military interference at elections," by a vote of 33 to 23. Eighteen Senators were paired, so that the full vote would have stood 42 to 32, and two Senators, one of each party, were absent. The vote was strictly a partisan one, unless we regard Mr. David Davis as an Independent, which is unnecessary, as, though he often poses in that character, he never acts in it. The Republicans protested, as they ought to have done, with great earnestness against the doctrine, the motive, and the effect of the bill. Mr. Edmunds opposed it in a speech which contained a calm but strong review of the provisions of the Constitution and the laws with reference to the authority of the Federal Government to regulate Congressional elections and of the President to enforce such regulations. Messrs Blaine and Chandler contented themselves with pointing out the spirit in which the Democrats had conceived the bill. The bill finally passed was the one that came from the House, the Senate having at the last moment yielded to the dictation of the joint caucus, and abandoned all effort to get its own views adopted. The act will be submitted to the President to-day.

The joint resolution providing for a constitutional amendment, introduced in the House yesterday by Mr. Lapham, should receive the prompt attention of Congress. It presents the principle now incorporated in the Constitutions of the principal States of the Union, that particular clauses of an appropriation bill may be vetoed without detriment to the approval of the remainder. After the nonsense so freely ventilated by the Democrats in both houses about the time-honored privilege of prescribing the conditions on which appropriations for the support of the Government may be voted, it is possible that the majority may be in no humor to consider a proposition to weaken this suppositious guarantee of republican freedom. But were it for no better reason than to save their party from ever drifting into so foolish and so untenable a position as that from which they are now trying to extricate themselves, the majority in Congress should display the utmost readiness to take the steps preliminary to the submission of the proposed amendment to the people.

The refusal of the Assembly to agree with the adverse report on the bill compelling the elevated railroads to extend the hours in which five-cent trains are run, and to find some better place for cleaning their cars and engines than over the streets, is significant of the altered sentiment which these corporations must be prepared to face at Albany and elsewhere. The enormous profits which they have been enabled to secure through the power given them to take public and private property without compensation will henceforth be regarded as a fund from which the people ought to be reimbursed for the sacrifices they have been compelled to make on behalf of rapid transit. Mr. Galvin is probably right in his statement that the time is not far off when the companies will be compelled to make five cents their maximum fare, and there can be no question about their ability to increase the facilities now afforded by "commission" trains without serious detriment to the profits of their business. Their conversion of the streets into a dumping-ground for ashes and other refuse cannot be too promptly or emphatically checked.

The City pays at least three times too much for the luxury of having Mr. Thomas Dunlap as Commissioner of Jurors, and there is a very fair prospect that it will have to bear the burden of that official old man of the sea for at least a few years longer. Mr. Dunlap seems to have had a special legislative providence assigned to his protection. Two attempts to reduce his salary have been made at two consecutive sessions of the Legislature, but without success, and though the legislation of the present session may reach the emoluments of his office, it is certain that it will not affect them during his incumbency. Moreover, the charter of 1873 seems to have been framed with the express purpose of throwing uncertainty upon the duration of Mr. Dunlap's official term. The Corporation Counsel confesses his inability to solve so knotty a problem in a way which could be considered final, and the aid of the courts must be invoked to discover whether Mr. Dunlap's successor can be appointed now or whether he must be left in possession till 1881. Intrenched as he already is, beyond the reach of legislative interference, the dreadful contingency suggests itself of having no authority in the State competent to relieve the City of Dunlap. Few remember the time when he did not hold office; can it be that he is destined to be the perpetual recipient of $15,000 a year from the City Treasury?

THE CALIFORNIA SURPRISE.

There are two sides to the question involved in the ratification of the California Constitution. One, and that the more obvious side, affords ample justification for the mingled amazement and alarm which the unexpected incident has called forth. The general character of the instrument itself did not excite surprise. Kearneyites and Socialists and Communists of every grade were known to be represented in the convention that gave it birth; and its provisions were regarded as the product of influences which the good sense of the State would surely vote down. Its popular ratification, therefore, is a blow to the conservative prophets, and a note of alarm to the powerful interests which suddenly find themselves at the mercy of the power they have at once hated and despised. Practically, perhaps, the working of the Constitution may be less disastrous than it seems likely to be. Some of its purposes depend for their efficacy upon legislation which jeopardized influences may contrive to control, and others upon the intervention of agencies which may prove not to be beyond temptation. Indeed, bearing in mind the motives that were uppermost in the convention, and the distrust of legislators and commissions which pervaded it, the failure to incorporate in the organic law more specific methods for the attainment of the ends in view is a surprising feature of its proceedings. Making allowance for all the loop-holes thus afforded by the inexperience of the majority and their indifference to prudential considerations, the Constitution still retains a formidable capacity for mischief. It assails the thrift of industry as well as the extortions of capital. It wages a senseless war upon property as bitterly as it attacks the encroachments of monopoly. It crushes enterprise that it may more surely stifle the fraud and gambling of stock speculation. Working men, therefore, will suffer as certainly as capitalists. The community as a whole will be compelled to pay penalties which the authors of the Constitution intended to exact from limited classes. Measures that will primarily cripple San Francisco and close the sources of much of its wealth, will ultimately react upon the State. We cannot wonder that an event so far-reaching in its scope, and so evidently ruinous in many of its consequences, is regarded with apprehension not unmixed with incredulity. Distant observers are at a loss for an explanation of what is viewed as betokening rabid Communism in a State whose characteristics have ordinarily been associated with intense business activity and a large average of prosperity.

How, then, shall the action of the State be explained? The current answer, which attributes the majority of the popular vote to the influences represented by Denis Kearney, is ridiculously inadequate. Communism of the kind which appears to thrive in Chicago is equally unsatisfactory as an explanation. Where Kearneyism and Communism have their strongholds, the vote is against the Constitution. The large cities are against it. Our present information points to the farming and mining districts of the State as the centres of the feeling whose development brings an entire community face to face with momentous social and business problems. What hold the Communists have acquired in the mining districts we have no data for determining. But the presumption is overwhelmingly against the idea that the crazy assaults upon property which distinguish the Communistic orators of the Pacific coast cities have any charm for the California farmers. Their sympathies are with Grangerism, not with Kearneyism or Communism. Undoubtedly, the Grangers of Wisconsin and other Western States never went the length of the California Constitution. In their wildest mood they never assailed property with the blind folly and wickedness which are apparent in more than one provision of the new law. We have, however, abundant evidence of the fact that the farmers of many of our States have little or none of the conservatism which has been usually supposed to spring from the ownership of real property. The Granger war upon railroad corporations was but the first of many signs of the recklessness with which a farming community strikes when it finds taxation oppressive, debt unbearable, and the general drift of things at variance with what it considers its interest. The Granger movement, as a distinct force, has almost disappeared. The more sweeping movement that absorbed it is wide and deep. Is not this the movement which, extending to California, has supplied a large part of the majority for the new Constitution? An alliance of farmers with the Kearneyites and the Communists is not natural, judging of farmers by the old standard. But in these days farmers engaged in a political movement are not unlike other politicians who care more for the end than the means. They are not overnice about alliances. They understand log-rolling, and in their eagerness to overcome corporations may concede to Communistic allies terms which, pushed to their logical consequences, shake the foundation of all property.

The considerations to which California directs the attention of the country involve too much to be disposed of with a sneer. Popular opinion runs counter to great railroad corporations, and not wholly without reason. Their monopolizing tendencies, their disregard of rights and interests that conflict with their pretensions, their evasion of taxation, and their perversion of power held subject to the condition that it shall not be used adversely to the public weal,—are characteristics with which States other than California are familiar. But in California corporate monopoly has acquired proportions, and asserts itself with an insolence, unknown elsewhere. Among railroads its type is the Central Pacific; among banks, the Bank of California. The so-called Bonanza capitalists illustrate the arrogance of wealth in other forms, and the shameless greed and trickery with which it carries out its plans. And the stock speculation of San Francisco has frauds peculiarly its own. It is necessary to remember these things when trying to account for the condition of public opinion which has made the California Constitution possible. They do not constitute excuses for its wrongs and follies. But they do help to render intelligible the madness which enabled knaves and demagogues to accomplish so much harm.

THE SILVER INFLATION MOVEMENT.

Mr. Warner gave notice in the House yesterday that he should call the previous question on his Silver bill on Tuesday next, so that we bid fair to have one or two days more of such debate as has already been indulged in. The prospect is not cheerful, even if we could be sure, as we cannot be, that the House would ultimately reject the bill. A discussion, in which the wildest propositions of finance are advanced with the utmost earnestness and energy, in which appeals, sometimes insidious, and sometimes openly inflammatory, are made to the dangerous passions of a special class, in which capitalists are denounced as the foes of the working men, and the Government is represented as being engaged in a conspiracy to defraud the poor for the benefit of the rich—such a discussion is never desirable in a country like ours. We boast of our free institutions, of the equality of our citizens, and of the general spread of intelligence, but there is no country enjoying representative government in which so unpromising a picture of the condition of the people could be drawn as was given in yesterday's debate. Indeed, the spirit in which Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, one of the cleverest of the Greenbackers, assailed the justice of our laws and the working of our system of Government was practically as bitter and as uncompromising as that shown by the Socialists of Germany, or the Nihilists of Russia in their respective countries. And the most unfortunate feature of the case is, that he was loudly applauded by many members on the side of the majority.

Apart from this general consideration, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the Warner bill embodies a certain specific line of policy which is being pursued with great tenacity, and which is of the most threatening character, because it is directed toward the weakest point of the financial system of the Government. When Mr. Sherman was before the Coinage Committee, by which the Warner bill was reported, he urged an opinion on that committee which is a perfectly just one, and which was entitled to great respect, not only on account of the facts by which it was sustained, but on account of the authority of the officer of the Government who offered it. It was, in substance, that unless the coinage of the depreciated silver dollar was stopped, or the value of the dollar brought to par with gold by increasing its weight, the country would gradually but inevitably be forced to the acceptance of a single standard, and that the standard of depreciated silver. The reply of the committee to this opinion, amply sustained by the history of our own and other countries, and backed by the deliberate statement of the highest official financial authority of the nation, was the reporting of a bill, which, instead of suspending the coinage of silver, not only removes all limit from it, but provides for an indefinite issue of bullion certificates, which give all the effect of the depreciated coin to the uncoined bullion. The conclusion is unavoidable, either that the committee distrusted the correctness of the Secretary's prediction, or else that it was not averse to the result which he pointed out. The latter is undoubtedly the true solution. The Coinage Committee is in the hands of men who, like Mr. Warner, are ready to press forward to inflated and irredeemable paper money by the pathway of depreciated silver. They are at present urging the unlimited coinage of silver only because silver is not worth so much as gold. Their talk about maintaining specie payments is an idle pretense. The only kind of specie which they will tolerate is silver, and they favor that because they know that if they can force silver enough into the currency it will drive out gold, reduce the paper to the level of silver, compel the suspension of the present redemption system, and open the way to new issues of greenbacks. They understand that the great obstacle to the success of their plans is the Resumption act of 1875, and as they have no hope of attacking this directly, they attack it indirectly. Mr. Weaver yesterday stated their position very adroitly, but in a manner which no one who understands the situation can misapprehend in the slightest degree. He denied that he and his party were "inflationists." He said that they desired a currency of gold, silver, and paper, all of equal and full legal-tender quality. But it is probable that Mr. Weaver knows, and it is certain that it is true, whether he knows it or not, that a currency of this triple composition is practically a currency of that one element which is the cheapest. The equality between the three being only in legal-tender quality, that is, in the quality of paying debts, the debtor will not use gold, or silver either, if they are dearer than paper; he will use paper only, and the two metals will disappear. Mr. Weaver's party aims first at displacing gold by silver, but if it can accomplish that it will no more stop there than a man falling from the roof stops at the second story window. It will go on until it has reached the last stage, where, as he put it, "money will be cheap and property will be dear."

Meanwhile, even though the House reject the Warner bill, or though the House pass it and the Senate or the President should stop it, its introduction and discussion have one practical effect—they completely prevent the remedial legislation demanded by the Secretary of the Treasury. While the finance committees of the House are under the control of men of Mr. Weaver's and Mr. Warner's stamp, and are putting forward such measures as that now before the House, there is no chance of stopping the coinage of silver dollars, and this negative fact, slowly, but very surely, may be relied on to bring about the condition of things which the Greenbackers desire. Business men who flatter themselves that the Greenback element is powerless, or that all the country needs is to be let alone, will find out their mistake sooner or later. While the Greenbackers are apparently working in vain for free silver and more greenbacks, the steady accumulation of what Mr. Chittenden calls the "imprisoned silver" in the vaults of the Treasury is doing their work for them in a way which will ultimately require very active measures to counteract its influence.

THE TALMAGE TRIAL.

The result of the Talmage trial, in Brooklyn, is depressing to people who desire that the Christian religion shall not be brought into contempt by the misdeeds or follies of its professed exponents. It proves that an ecclesiastical body holds to a code of ethics which is so foreign to the average sense of men as to be repugnant. It proves that certain professing Christians, moved by the so-called usefulness and earnestness of a preacher, may condone in him faults which could not be overlooked by mere moralists in merely worldly men. It should be borne in mind that Mr. Talmage was arraigned on charges which affected his personal character as a man. As a preacher, he was already known to the public to be, to use the mildest phrase, eccentric and peculiar. His contortions, his extravagant and startling expressions, and the audaciousness of his themes had attracted very general attention. In some of his discourses he showed to well-informed people a determination to create a sensation in the pulpit, even at the cost of the truth. In one or two instances, heretofore alluded to in these columns, he gave reins to his fancy, while speaking of alleged scenes of night-life in New-York, in such a reckless manner as to convince those who heard him, or read his sermons, that he was wilfully misstating facts. This is a grave charge to bring against a Christian clergyman. Yet this was not the charge on which Mr. Talmage was lately tried. There are thousands of Christian people who deplore the flippancy and irreverence which have marked Mr. Talmage's ministrations. There are other thousands who are grieved by his manifest inaccuracy of statement; and we do not doubt that there are many worthy people who believe that Mr. Talmage is an arrant charlatan, who seeks notoriety in a calling with which he has no sympathy, and in which he is grossly out of place. Yet none of these implied charges were brought against him during his late trial.

The gravamen of the charges on which Mr. Talmage was tried was comprised in two words: "Falsehood and deceit." The specifications referred to his actions and declarations regarding the newspaper with which he had been connected; his declarations concerning the sittings in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, its debt and subscriptions; and his actions and utterances concerning other minor matters. The evidence bearing upon these several specifications has been spread before the public from day to day. With every reasonable desire to see the accused fully cleared, we must admit that the charges were practically sustained. No layman amenable to the unwritten laws which govern the conduct of business men could have been acquitted by a jury of his peers when confronted by such evidence as that adduced against Mr. Talmage. No newspaper editor could possibly hope to maintain a respectable position among his brother journalists after he had used his position and the property of the newspaper from which he had been dismissed as Mr. Talmage used his last opportunities in the office of the Christian at Work. It is nowhere pretended that Mr. Talmage's conduct in this particular was criminal. He did not make himself amenable to the law. But it was, nevertheless, dishonorable. It was "sharp practice." If a Christian minister can afford, even under provocation of wrong, to resort to sharp practice in order to get even with those against whom he has cause of dispute, then the sacred calling has fallen upon evil times. In regard to the matter of church sittings and church subscriptions, the same low cunning and deceit were constantly practiced by the accused. As in the previous instance, no well-defined crime was committed; but all the declarations and actions of Mr. Talmage were deceptive and devious where the general subject was concerned. It is impossible for any candid man to avoid coming to this conclusion. And it is notorious, and abundantly proved, that when charges against Mr. Talmage were being prepared, he endeavored to mislead the public by alleging that he was to be tried for heterodoxy, not for offenses against strict morals.

It appears that Mr. Talmage has been acquitted on the ground that he is in earnest as a Christian worker, and that he is a genial gentleman who means to do about right. It is a little singular that almost none of the members of the ecclesiastical court who voted in favor of Mr. Talmage expressed any conviction that the charges brought against him were unfounded. It is tacitly admitted that the defendant may have been free with his tongue, that he may have been indiscreet at times, and that he may have resorted to sharp practice, once in a while, when he was in a tight place. But, on the whole, he was such a good fellow, and is so thoroughly in earnest as a preacher, it would be a pity to draw the line too sharply between duty and doubtful doings. So gifted a man ought to have some license, and it will not do to prescribe for him the same rigid rules as those which the pews must have laid upon them. Then, again, he is orthodox, although he may turn sharp corners in business morals. It is a great thing to be orthodox in these days of free thinking. And Mr. Talmage, who subscribes to the Westminster Confession, escapes without censure, although guilty of practices which honest men condemn as immoral. One trial in Brooklyn, not long since, brought great scandal on the Christian Church and sorely grieved the hearts of those who believe that a pure religion is one of the chief bulwarks of stable government and orderly society. In the result of the Talmage trial we see a blow inflicted upon that cause which is, if possible, more hurtful than the Beecher trial. In the face of evidence which no reasonable man can gainsay, Mr. Talmage is exonerated of blame by a court of Christian clergymen. To coaxen, wheedle, speak deceitfully, and resort to devious ways is, in a genial preacher of undoubted orthodoxy, no offense—no crime. This is certainly not the morality which Jesus taught.

THE BLANQUI QUESTION.

It is not easy to comprehend the excitement, amounting almost to consternation, occasioned in political circles in France by the election, as a Deputy for Bordeaux, of the hoary-headed conspirator, Blanqui, who has for the last seven years lain in prison at Clairvaux. But it threatens to prove an event of no small importance, and has been discussed with the utmost energy and spirit by the French journals of all shades of opinion. It seriously divides the Republicans, it embarrasses the Ministry, it will cause no little trouble in the Chamber, when that body comes together again next week, and it would not be strange if it were to precipitate a change of Administration. The case must strike Americans as very simple. Blanqui is not only under sentence of imprisonment for life, but is disqualified by law from holding any public office. Hence, one would imagine, his election is simply null and void, and there is no more to be said. But to the minds of Radical Frenchmen there is much more to be said. The Government may pardon the culprit, out of deference to the citizens of Bordeaux, who have expressed their desire to be represented by him in the councils of the nation, and the Chamber of Deputies may validate his election. It is claimed that universal suffrage has spoken in favor of the liberation of the hardened offender against political stability and his admission to the Chamber, and the Government is bound to heed the voice or violate one of the fundamental principles on which it is based. It is not necessary to point out the absurdity of this position, which would enable the friends of any criminal to rescue him from the penalty of the law, provided they could beat up a majority to elect him to some office, but it is gravely maintained by French journals which are not usually regarded as wholly bereft of reason.

What makes this case so difficult to manage, and so likely to cause serious trouble, is that almost every one recognizes the fact that Blanqui was unjustly imprisoned and unwisely excluded from the amnesty. His offense was taking part in the rising against the Government of the National Defense during the siege of Paris, when, on the 31st of October, 1870, the Hotel de Ville was attacked and Gen. Trochu and his colleagues captured. No blood was shed, and Blanqui and his fellow-conspirators were induced to withdraw and abandon their purpose of upsetting the Government of the National Defense, on the distinct agreement that they were not to be prosecuted. It is a fact worth recalling that among the members of the Government assailed were Henri Rochefort, now clamoring for Blanqui's release and admission to the Chamber—doubtless with an eye to his own escape from exile by the same door—and Jules Ferry, a prominent Minister in the existing Cabinet. Blanqui took no part whatever in the exploits of the Commune, or in the disorder and bloodshed that followed the capitulation of Paris. His one offense, beyond an evil habit of conspiring, was participation in the abortive rising of Oct. 31, but when he appeared, early in 1871, after some weeks of mysterious seclusion, he was at once clapped under arrest by M. Thiers and subsequently tried by court-martial and condemned to death.

Not only his friends, but many moderate Republicans, claim that in view of this inordinate severity, which violated the pledge of the Government of the National Defense, he should have been the first to benefit by the amnesty; but he has been excluded from it, until the people of Bordeaux put the Radical protest into the emphatic and embarrassing form of an election to the Chamber of Deputies. Now, there are two courses open. It may be assumed that, however unjust the original condemnation or unwise the exclusion from amnesty, the election of an ineligible candidate is void, and cannot be accepted as a means of coercing the Government into clemency. If the Chamber accepts this view, it has simply to sustain it by invalidating the election. Then occasion may be taken for rectifying past mistakes, if they exist, in the matter of amnesty and pardon. On the other hand, the prisoner of Clairvaux might be pardoned and released before the Deputies meet on the 15th inst., leaving the Chamber to take its own course in regard to validation. Neither course would meet the approval of all the Republicans, and it is doubtful if anything can be done to avoid serious division, which will weaken, if not overturn, the Ministry; for it is not agreed upon a policy of any kind, least of all upon one that can command the support of a majority.

A St. Louis locksmith, John C. Hamilton, is reported to have in his possession the keys of the world-renowned Bastile. After the revolutionists had rushed over the second drawbridge of the historic prison and slain the Governor, Delaunay, one of them, named Lochapelle, secured the keys. They were kept in the family until one of its members, Andrew Lochapelle, emigrated (1852) to the United States, and found his way, in straitened circumstances, to St. Louis, where Hamilton bought them of him. There are five keys in all, the largest very rusty, and looking old enough to have been used by Hugo Aubriot, Prevôt of Paris, who built the fortress five centuries since. The smallest, eight inches long, is of fine steel, the notches to fit the wards of the lock being so small that a bit of paper cannot easily be inserted in them. The keys are interesting enough to be purchased by some museum, like the Hôtel de Cluny, to whose collection they would be a valuable addition. Few historic occurrences have been more exaggerated than the taking of the Bastile by the Parisian mob. There was no heroism in an armed host attacking a stronghold defended by only 82 invalids and 32 Swiss mercenaries. Nor was it courageous or creditable to kill the Governor, after he had allowed the drawbridge to be lowered to give the infuriated people admission. Anybody could have destroyed a pile of masonry when it had ceased to have defenders. The popular notion is that many political prisoners were released, although only three unknown men and four forgers were found there. The circumstance was important simply because it was the turning-point in the revolution, breaking the spirit of the Court party, and changing the current of events in France.

It is curious to notice how invariably the names under which the lands of the East have become familiar to the civilized world, are utterly different from those used by the natives themselves. The mediæval "Cathay" and the modern "China" are mere corruptions of the Russian "Kitai" and the Hindoo "Chean," the native name being Chung-Kwo, or Middle Kingdom. "Afghanistan" is a Persian word, signifying "land of the Afghans," which has completely superseded the local title of "Wilajit," (Mother-land.) The Empire of Burmah is called by its own people "Myammah." Persia is styled Iran, and Central Asia Turan, by those who inhabit them. Lower Egypt is Bahiri, Upper Egypt Vostani. The little Principality of Kashasg, formerly called "Alti-Shasr," (Six Cities,) is now "Dytti-Shasr," (Seven Cities.) The Greeks still give their miniature kingdom the classic name of Hellas, and the Turks call themselves Osmanlis.

The effort which the Chinese Government has made to establish by subsidies a native line of steamers between their different sea and river ports has ended in a disastrous failure. These steamers were formerly owned by one or two American business houses, Messrs. Russell & Co. having most of them under their control. For years the returns received for river transportation were very remunerative, but six or eight years ago the profits upon this branch of business declined in much the same way that they did upon most mercantile undertakings in China in which foreigners were interested, and as a company of native capitalists, financially supported by the Imperial Government, was desirous of purchasing the boats, they were sold by their foreign owners to what was termed the China Merchants' Steam Navigation Company. This corporation started with a capital of 730,000 taels, or, in other words, $937,500, but now, after a comparatively short trial, it is found that the company is in debt, in consequence of the advances made by the Government, to the amount of $4,375,000. With the publication of these facts has come a cessation of the subsidy, and the company managers have had recourse to a number of devices to ward off the rapid approach of bankruptcy. For a time some of the steamers were farmed out to their American and English Captains, but as this plan did not contain in it the promise of success, an attempt has been made to lease the agencies in the various open ports, those taking them paying the company a stipulated sum, and then making as much out of their contracts as they can. It will be contrary to all experience if such a plan succeeds, and if it does not, the 30 or more steam-boats, most of them of American construction, will probably be sold to the highest bidder, and the different lines will then be run under foreign auspices. There is very little likelihood of any American house entering again into this business, as none of them at present possess the standing that they once had. When the Chinese cease to run these steamers, they will probably be put into service under the English or German flag.

The falling off in the demand for English coal has had one salutary result, and that is, it has seemingly put a stop to the destruction by spontaneous combustion of coal vessels. Four or five years ago the number of large ships annually destroyed in this way was alarmingly great. In 1873, there were 23 ships, out of those which sailed from Great Britain laden with coal, which were lost by the spontaneous breaking out of fire in their cargoes. In 1874 the number of cases of fire was increased to 50, and it is now thought that if the domestic demand for coal had not then begun to fall off, the loss of vessel property in the succeeding years would have been even more serious. As it was, this period of destruction ended almost as quickly as it began. In 1875, the number of losses was relatively small, and for a year or two past, although vast quantities of coal are annually shipped from Cardiff and Newcastle to South America and the East Indies, we believe there has not been a single case reported of spontaneous combustion in a vessel's cargo. This sudden change goes far to substantiate the theory put forward four years ago by Mr. B. Cooper Rundell, an English scientist. It had been claimed that these fires were due to imperfect systems of ventilation, and also to the fact that the coal had been wet with rain before it was put into the ship's hold. The trouble with this line of argument, as Mr. Rundell pointed out, was, that it did not explain the reason for the previous non-occurrence of fires. The methods of ventilation and the average of rain-fall remained tolerably uniform; but in one year two coal ships were destroyed, and in another 50 cargoes took fire. The cause, therefore, would seem to lie outside of these two conditions, and Mr. Rundell traced it to the very large quantity of small coal which at that time, in the excessive pressure of business, was taken from the mines and hurried in a damp state on board of the vessels. The article was then in so much demand that it was useless to object to the inferior quality of the coal furnished, or to expect that before being delivered it would be dried by exposure to the sun. The shippers had to take what they could get, and as a consequence of this indiscriminate loading, millions of dollars' worth of shipping property was destroyed. At present, the coal purchased for shipment is taken from large heaps that have been exposed to the drying action of the atmosphere, and has been carefully screened so as to exclude the finer particles which the high prices of five years ago allowed the mines to dispose of as merchantable.

The citadel of St. Petersburg, known as "Petropavlovskaya Kreposts," (the Fort of Peter and Paul,) stands facing the Winter Palace, on one of the small marshy islands formed by the numerous channels of the Neva. It is of considerable extent, although quite inadequate to contain the thousands of Nihilist prisoners said to have been confined in it. Ever since its foundation, however, it has served as a prison for State criminals, including, among others, old Marshal Munnich, the Minister Biron, the young Prince Ivan V., and Prince Tarakanoff. The latter, according to a tradition strenuously denied by Russian historians, was confined in a dungeon below the level of the Neva, and drowned by the bursting in of the water during the great inundation of November, 1824. In the neighborhood of the fortress stands a tiny wooden hut, greatly venerated by the Russians as the first house erected in St. Petersburg, built by Peter the Great with his own hands in 1701. The fine church in the centre of the citadel, the tall gilded spire of which is visible to a considerable distance, marks the spot where all the Romanoffs have been buried since the opening of the eighteenth century, except Peter II., who is interred at Moscow. A curious custom is still kept up in connection with this fortress, the commandant of which crosses the river in a boat to the Winter Palace the moment the ice breaks up in the Spring, and presents a silver cup to the Czar, who thereupon fills it with silver pieces and hands it back to him.

DISCUSSIONS OF THE DOCTORS.

Atlanta, Ga., May 9.—The American Medical Association adjourned to-day until the first Tuesday in June of next year, at New-York. The Committee on Prize Essays consists of the following New-York physicians: Austin Flint, Alfred Post, Joseph Hutchinson, J. W. Gouley, and Montrose A. Pallen. Herman Knapp delivered the annual address on "Ophthalmology." The motions presented their papers and results of meetings, which were ordered printed. Resolutions on more thorough control of State medicine by Congress were passed. The following committee was appointed to represent the association abroad: Drs. Seguin, Yandell, Dascom, Quinn, Trumbull, and Warren. Delegates to the Canadian Association—E. Hutchins and W. Bennett. The Committee on Prize Essays reported in favor of awarding $100 to McLane Hamilton, of New-York, for an essay on spinal curvature; the second prize was not awarded. Dr. Davis, of Chicago, in presenting a resolution of thanks, paid a glowing tribute to Atlanta, which was heartily applauded by the association. Theophilus Powin, the retiring President, delivered a valedictory, and gave up his seat to Louis Sayre, President-elect, who made a few remarks. After the association adjourned, Dr. Sayre gave a public exhibition of the operation of fitting a plaster jacket on a hunchback. A ball was given to-night in honor of the association. An excursion to Augusta carried 100 visiting physicians. At the banquet last night, Gov. Gordon, of Maine, responding to the toast, "The Atlantic Coast," said that all sectional feeling was dead and no longer divided parties. As proof of this, he referred to his success in Maine. The United States Artillery Band struck up "Dixie," and great enthusiasm, with cheers, prevailed. "Hail Columbia" followed, with similar effect.

The Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle says: "The Democrats in Congress have cut a sorry figure in their contest with the Executive. They have blundered, blundered badly, and subjected themselves to merited ridicule."

One Dennis Collins started from San Francisco at 10 o'clock on the morning of the 1st inst., to walk to this City in 100 days, besides walking five miles in an hour in 20 cities on the route, making in all 3,500 miles, for a wager of $1,500.

The Hon. Alphonso Taft says that the report circulated in some portions of Ohio that he is a candidate for the United States Senate, and is "setting up" the next Legislature for that purpose, is a sheer political fabrication, with not one word of truth in it.

The Columbus (Ohio) State Journal claims that, although they are very quiet about it just now, a majority of our people west of the Alleghenies, who live along the shores of the great lakes and in the Upper Mississippi Valley, are in favor of the peaceable annexation of Canada.

Gov. St. John, of Kansas, has not forgotten how freely and unquestioningly the negroes of the South helped Union soldiers escaping from rebel prisons during the war, and he says that now that they are refugees, seeking new homes, they deserve as fair and as kind treatment as they gave.

The Meridian (Miss.) Mercury claims that at least one-half of the Southern cotton crop is grown by actual white labor at present, and it argues that if the negroes were removed more white labor would embark in the culture of cotton, as it is now kept out of the field by a natural repugnance to come in contact with negro labor.

Col. John T. Crisp, the defeated Democratic candidate for Congress in the Eighth District of Missouri last Fall, was stabbed and quite badly wounded by Benjamin J. Franklin, the late member, in Kansas City, on the 5th inst. The quarrel grew out of the Democratic divisions in the last campaign.

The Selma (Ala.) Times is another Democratic paper opposed to the public school system. It says: "Stop educating the children of fathers who are opposed to Democracy without cause or reason. Stop educating children who are taught from the cradle to hate the hand that feeds them."

The Fall River (Mass.) News relates the following as a fact: "Two men were conversing about the anticipated strike the other day, when one of them, a mule-spinner, remarked that he had been in 26 strikes during his lifetime. 'Well,' said the other, 'did you ever make anything by it?' 'Not once,' was the reply; 'lost every time.'"

The Montreal Witness notes the departure of several French Canadian families for the mills and factories in Greenfield and Holyoke, Mass., and says: "Large numbers of French-Canadians leave every Spring for the New-England States, and return again in the Fall to spend the Winter months in this city, where the cost of subsistence is not so high as in the States."

The Richmond (Va.) Dispatch of yesterday says: "The interview of Messrs. All the needed arrangements have been made, and about the 1st of June the funding of the State debt at the low interest will be begun with great activity."

D., who was for many years its President. The college authorities and the Maine Historical Society unite in giving the invitation. Prof. Everett was a Professor in the college during part of Dr. Woods's Presidency.

A woman applied for a divorce in the Supreme Judicial Court, Boston, this week, from a man who deserted her 23 years ago, and after she had proved this fact and also that he had since deserted another woman in Pennsylvania after having had six children by her, she was called upon by the court to prove that he is still living, and being unprepared to do so on the moment, the case was left open.

Wide-spread is the influence of advertisements. A lady in Portland, Me., lost an ear-ring, and advertised it in one of the papers of that city on the morning of April 29. On Monday last she received it by mail from this City, the sender explaining that he had been in Portland and picked it up in the street, and that, happening to look over a copy of the Portland paper after his return here, he saw the advert

RECORD OF AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL.

THE WILHELMJ CHAMBER CONCERT.

The fourth of the series of these concerts was given last evening, at Steinway Hall, to one of the largest and most cultivated audiences that has been assembled at any entertainment this season. The programme as given, was as follows:

1. Quartet, (A minor, Op. 132).....Beethoven
2. Aria.....Scarlatti
Miss Drasdil.
3. Violin Solo—"Chaconne".....J. S. Bach
Herr Wilhelmj.
4. Song—"Rel Kiss".....Schubert
Miss Drasdil.
Quartet, (E minor).....Mendelssohn

Mr. Vogrich was announced for a piano solo, but was unable to appear, and the audience was thereby spared a superfluous addition to the programme. The Beethoven quartet was, of course, the principal event of interest, if the entertainment is to be mentioned as a chamber-music concert. This work, (which Thayer, in his "Life of Beethoven," says was composed in 1825, and Marx, with equal positiveness declares was written in 1823,) though usually numbered op. 132, should probably be op. 130, and was, according to the best authority, composed before the B flat and C sharp minor quartets. Beethoven's last opus was 135, and this quartet therefore belongs to his latest and grandest period, when, as his contemporary, Rellstab, quotes from an interview, the great master said he wrote to please himself. This period, from op. 125 to the close, was illustrated by the Ninth Symphony, the D minor mass, the last piano sonatas, and the quartets, in which the composer seems to have found vent for his most exalted and passionate emotions. The A minor quartet is the most generally admired among musicians, though less frequently heard than other concerted music by Beethoven. It has not been played in New-York since the days when during 15 years of thankless work, the quartet composed of Theodore Thomas, Mosenthal, Matzka, and Bergner were accustomed to give chamber-music concerts in a manner which has not since been equaled. The enjoyment of its performance demands previous preparation and acquaintance. There is nothing about it to tickle the ear, or even to satisfy a person of good musical intelligence who has not some familiarity with it. It must be listened to in a serious spirit, and under such conditions will appeal to the true lover of Beethoven. The quartet is said to have been written after recovery from a severe illness, and to be of the nature of descriptive music. The first movement is a restless allegro, the second indicates a quiet convalescence, the third a devout thanksgiving for recovery, and the short fourth and fifth movements are of a bright and joyous character. Of all these, the third movement is the most noticeable, being really a choral written in the style of Bach, with the infusion of Beethoven's genius in the middle part of it. It has the form in which chorals are used in Germany, with an interlude made in imitative style between the lines. In the second part it is marked by the composer, "sentendo nuova forza," and then follows the working out of the choral in the form of Bach, with the added fervor of Beethoven's nature. The return consists of the choral melody by the first violin, the other instruments carrying out the subject of the interlude as the counterpoise to the choral, and then it comes back to the movement, which is presented in the form of which Beethoven alone was capable. The short march of the fourth movement introduces the fifth, which is melodic and almost italian, being passionate and graceful, and designed for the first violin, with an exceeding effective accompaniment by the other instruments. The performance of this noble quartet last evening was not all that might have been expected. It was somewhat rough and uneven; good at times and then again disappointing, and if Herr Wilhelmj had given his undivided attention to his music, and thought less of playing and looking at the audience, would have been more enjoyable.

The other number of the programme, which comes under the head of chamber music, the Mendelssohn quartet in B minor, is well known, and does not call for special comment. Herr Wilhelmj gave a superb performance of the Bach chaconne, as he has often done before, and in response to the enthusiasm he naturally excited by this unequaled exhibition of the violinist's skill, responded with an encore. If there must be singing at a concert of this character, the audience were fortunate in having Miss Drasdil to do it. She was in excellent voice and sang in the noble and artistic style for which she is distinguished, being, of course, recalled. Reviewing these concerts in the light of what is well known among musical students and those who have heard chamber music effectively rendered for many years in New-York and other cities, it only remains to reaffirm the opinion previously expressed, that this series has not been particularly good. A frank expression by the artists themselves would doubtless justify this opinion. The concerts have been essentially "Wilhelmj concerts." When there was any applause at the end of a movement, Wilhelmj has bowed his acknowledgments, and his fellow-performers have remained impassive. The fact is that Wilhelmj does not fulfill the necessary qualifications of a quartet player. He is a violin virtuoso, and in that character he is pre-eminent; but he is by nature, by experience, and the results of popular demonstrations of approval, unable to divest himself of his individuality, and his quartet in which he takes part must necessarily be a "Wilhelmj quartet." This spirit, which has been unduly manifested, has detracted from the interest of the concerts among those thoughtful lovers of chamber music who were competent to rise above the considerations of the personal ability of the performers, and wished to hear the compositions rendered without any undue effort or display of virtuosity. All assertions of a first performer in a quartet are out of keeping with the nature of the work. Herr Wilhelmj, however, never seems to forget that most of the audience have come to hear him, and shows his consciousness of this fact in such a marked way as to make his lack of good stage manner noticeable by contrast with his fellow-artists. A virtuoso is, indeed, out of place in a quartet if he persists in his self-assertion. Moreover, no amount of talent and individual excellence can supply the one essential feature of good quartet-playing, precision. However well each player may know his part, if the members of the quartet are not thoroughly accustomed to each other, and have not played together till they have acquired absolute confidence and mutual understanding, the weak spots will inevitably appear, and the critical ear will not be slow to detect them.

It has been quite evident that many of the selections which have been played in this series have been insufficiently rehearsed. In one instance the performers were evidently unacquainted with their parts, in addition to the admitted fact that they had but one "scratch" rehearsal. This is altogether unworthy of the individual reputation of the artists, and while the attempt may succeed with ignorant or blind enthusiasts, it does not deserve to be encouraged and should be properly characterized. The introduction of singing, mostly by inferior artists, and in large quantities, has been a serious drawback to the enjoyment of the concerts, and indicated a lack of taste in the management, and an unworthy disposition to court popular favor, which probably resulted in no real gain to the treasury, and only served to annoy the genuine lovers of chamber music, who would have been entirely satisfied with the legitimate music they were entitled to.

CAUSE OF COL. DWIGHT'S DEATH.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 9.—The medical jury in the inquest held by Coroner Roberts on the late Col. Walton Dwight, at the instance of interested insurance companies, rendered the following verdict this afternoon:

"We find that the said Walton Dwight came to his death at the Spaulding House in the City of Binghamton on the 15th of November, 1878, from exhaustion of the vital powers, produced by protracted vomiting, malnutrition, and the enervating effects of malarial poison, terminating in a fatal collapse; and, furthermore, we find that the said Walton Dwight did not come to his death from suicide or homicidal means."

REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN LITIGATION.

PHILADELPHIA, May 9.—The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, now sitting in Harrisburg, has just decided a second suit growing out of the suspension of George H. Stewart, by the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, for hymn-singing and communing with other Evangelical churches. This decision sustains Mr. Stewart and his friends, at the same time condemning the action of the Synod, and continues the Rev. Dr. Stewart and the Second Reformed Presbyterian congregation in the undisputed possession of their property, which has been in his custody for the past 10 years. The first suit, involving similar issues, was decided in like manner in favor of the Rev. Dr. McAnlay and the Fifth Church, of this city, some time ago. The opinion in that case was delivered by Justice Gordon, Chief-Justice Sharswood and Justice Trunkey dissenting.

GARIBALDI IN ROME.

A SHATTERED BODY BUT A BRILLIANT MIND.

Rome Correspondence of the London Standard.

The poor war-worn old hero was carried past us into the waiting-room, and I saw many an eye suffused with tears, and heard many a mournful ejaculation when the door was closed. One man cried "Dio mio! To remember the charges of cavalry I have seen him at the head of!" Another, "The first time I saw him was at Naples, when he made his entry with King Victor Emmanuel and held a kingdom in the hollow of his hand!" Another, "I was with him in France." Another, "Do you remember the day he took the oath in the Parliament here? What enthusiasm! and now—he lies there!" The emotion was thoroughly genuine and thoroughly natural. To the vast majority of the men there he had been the hero of their youth, the incarnation of Italian independence, the Centaur who led them to victory, or to defeat which involved victory. As I have said, I was among the favored few admitted into the waiting-room. The litter was placed on the floor, and surrounded eagerly by all who had gained admission. The General's face had gained a little color and animation since the first moment of his arrival. His eye was bright, his expression cheerful, and his voice—that marvelous voice which has always formed one of his chief personal attractions—although feebler than usual, had not lost its deep musical tone. He spoke cheerfully with one and another. Asked how he had borne the journey, he replied that he had felt better on board the boat between Caprera and Civita Vecchia than he had felt for some time before. He had had a sharp rheumatic attack four or five days before leaving his island. The railway journey had fatigued him. Catching sight of Alberto Mario, he called him to him, and thanked him for a copy of a biography of himself, which Mario has just completed, and had sent to Caprera. The General had previously written a letter of thanks with his own hand, and he said twice over, with a cordial smile, "Grazie, caro, grazie." Then he recognized an English lady present, and remembered having been at her house in Florence. After a second or two he inquired for the director of a well-known journal of Rome, and when the gentleman, who was present, stepped forward, Garibaldi inquired, with some emphasis, whether he had received his letter of welcome to the Queen of England, and being assured that it had not only been printed, but copied into most of the principal journals of Europe, he seemed pleased. One veteran coming behind him, bent to kiss his forehead, and Garibaldi looking up, and recognizing him, said, smilingly, "Per dio! Mi prendete per la cera, vecchio!" (you come upon me in the rear!). As a word, if his body were penetrated, his mind and his memory appeared to be quite clear.

A FRUGAL AND INDUSTRIOUS EMPEROR.

Vienna Correspondence of the London Telegraph.

If simplicity, conscientiousness, and solicitude for the welfare of his subjects constitute the main characteristics of a good monarch, assuredly Franz Joseph I. will rank in history among the best sovereigns of Austria. I am not called upon, on this occasion, to examine the political results of his reign, nor, indeed, to comment at length on the personal merits of the Emperor. My object is merely to account for the demonstrations of loyalty which are forthcoming to-day from all parts of the country. They are unmistakably national and spontaneous. I have searched in vain for a trace of that official "inspiration" which a short time ago, on a similar occasion, I witnessed elsewhere. Here there is nothing of the kind; and I have no doubt that were it not for the sentiments they convey, the Emperor would very willingly dispense with these manifestations. His mode of living is simple, and he is known to be the hardest worker in the whole monarchy. He rises every morning at 5. As soon as he has finished his toilet he takes a cup of black coffee, smokes a "Virginia" cigar, and reads the reports of his Chef du Cabinet, commencing perused by an aide-de-camp. He sometimes quite alone, he afterward takes his morning walk, and, on coming home, toward 9 o'clock, he goes to the Empress's apartments, when she is in Vienna. He then gives audiences, often as many as 100 the same day, all his subjects having the right to ask for one, providing they have good character. At 12 he takes lunch, which always consists of the simplest possible fare. Black bread and Pilsner beer are served on the Emperor's luncheon table every day. In the afternoon he selles out again, and frequently pays a visit to some industrial establishment. He dines at 6, and very seldom goes to bed later than 9. His only recreation is hunting and shooting. His simple and industrious habits contribute to inspire his people with confidence and respect.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

The house of Dr. Delos W. Southworth, near Anacla, N. Y., was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. The occupants of the first floor barely escaped in their night clothes, so rapid was the spread of the flames. Dr. and Mrs. Southworth occupied a room on the second floor, from which the latter escaped as severely burned that doubts are entertained of her recovery, while the Doctor perished in the flames. Dr. Southworth and his wife were nearly 70 years of age. The barn adjoining, with three horses and carriages, was also destroyed. The loss is about $10,000.

The Knickerbocker Company's ice-house, about three miles below Athens, N. Y., was burned yesterday. The loss is $22,000. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

CUTTING FREIGHT RATES IN THE WEST.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 9.—The rates on grain and fourth class freight to the seaboard by rail, which had been fixed by the pool at 20 and 25 cents a hundred, are being cut by all lines. Authenticated cases are at hand of through freight at the rate of 15 cents—in fact this seems to be the prevailing rate, at present. Lake freights are also tumbling, and to-day the best bid for corn to Buffalo was 2¾ cents a bushel, with no charters.

BOATING IN ENGLAND.

LONDON, May 10.—Hawdon having challenged Robert Boyd and Kempster, of Sunderland, each to a match on the Tyne, the backers of the two latter are willing to accept, but on slightly different conditions as regards the start and stakes. It is considered certain that their suggestions will lead to business. Negotiations relative to the Hillock and Kearney match have been suspended until after the Elliott and Hanlan race. Elliott is adopting Hanlan's style.

DECORATING SOUTHERN GRAVES.

WILMINGTON, N. C., May 9.—This being Memorial Day, business was almost entirely suspended in the afternoon. Oakdale Cemetery was visited by local military, fire companies, and other civic organizations, and a large number of citizens, and the graves of Confederate soldiers were decorated with flowers. A salute was fired by the Cape Fear Artillery. An oration was made by Capt. J. M. Moffitt, of the Confederate steamer Florida.

SUICIDE OF A TOWN-OFFICER.

RUTLAND, Vt., May 9.—J. C. Spaulding, Tax Collector of Proctorsville, committed suicide at that place to-day by placing his neck on a railroad rail in front of the wheel of a forward car. His head was severed from the body. It is rumored that he was behind in his accounts.

BASE-BALL.

ALBANY, May 9.—Albanys, 7; Worcesters, 5. The Capital City Base-ball Club to-day signed papers to remove to Rochester. It will be known hereafter as the "Hop Bitters."

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., May 9.—Championship game—Springfields, 12; Holyokes, 3.

BALTIMORE, May 9.—New-Bedfords, 9; Baltimores, 1.

COMBINING AGAINST STRIKERS.

FALL RIVER, Mass., May 9.—The manufacturers are preparing to meet the threatened strike in the mills here. They have signed an agreement to shut down their mills in the event of a strike at one or more of the mills, and to keep them shut until the strike is over. The manufacturers have also agreed to place a notice to this effect in each mill.

DISCUSSING WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

ST. LOUIS, May 9.—The National Woman's Suffrage Convention adjourned to-night. The platform, an abstract of which has been published, was adopted after considerable discussion. The following officers were elected: President, Elizabeth Cady Stanton; Vice-President at Large, Susan B. Anthony.

SUICIDE OF A TRAMP.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 9.—A young tramp, Henry Dawson, shot himself fatally, at Barnesville, to-day. He left a note, in which he said: "I can't find work, and will shoot myself." He said he ran away from his father, in Tarrytown, N. Y., because he was beaten.

FLOUR FROM NEW WHEAT.

MACON, Ga. May 9.—The first barrel of flour from new wheat left to-night by the Southern express for the Produce Exchange, New-York.

OBITUARY NOTES.

The Hon. Charles Harrison, ex-member of the Legislative Council of New-Brunswick, died Thursday night, at the age of 89 years.

George B. Warren, a prominent and wealthy citizen, and the oldest native of Troy, N. Y., died Thursday night at the age of 82 years. He was a member of Assembly in 1844, and was one of the best amateur ornithologists in the State. He was also heavily interested in Western lands.

DEMANDING THEIR RIGHTS.

PRESENT CONDITION OF COLORED CITIZENS.

THE REPORT TO THE NATIONAL COLORED CONVENTION—THE RACE ADVISED TO RAISE ITSELF BY EDUCATION—DEMANDING PROTECTION.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., May 9.—In the National Colored Convention to-day Gen. P. B. S. Pinchback, Chairman of the Committee on "SOUTHERN REPORT," report, of which the following are the salient points:

Fifteen years have elapsed since our emancipation, and though we have made material advancement as citizens, yet we are compelled to admit that obstacles have been constantly thrown in our way to obstruct and retard our progress. Our toil is still unequited, hardly less under freedom than in slavery, whereby we are mainly oppressed by poverty and ignorance, and consequently prevented from enjoying the blessings of liberty, while we are left to the shame and contempt of all mankind. This unfortunate state of affairs is because of the intolerant spirit exhibited on the part of the man who control the South to-day. Free speech in many localities is not tolerated. The lawful rights of citizenship are denied when majorities must be overcome. Proscription meets us on every hand. In the school-room, in that church where prelates are sung to that God who made of one blood all nations of the earth, in places of public amusement, in the jury-box, and in local affairs of government, we are practically denied the rights and privileges of freemen. We cannot expect to rise to the dignity of true manhood under the system as heretofore carried out in some portions of the South. To-day wages are low at best, but when paid in scrip having no purchasing power beyond the limits prescribed by the land-owners, it must appear obviously plain that our condition is worse than under the system of slavery. We realize that education is the patent lever by which we are to be elevated to the position of useful citizenship. We have the disposition and natural ability to acquire and utilize knowledge where equal facilities are accorded; but we are denied the necessary advantages owing to a defective common school system and the non-enforcement of the laws in most of the Southern States. We therefore favor and recommend a national educational system embracing equal advantages for all, the same to be sustained by the proceeds of the sales of public lands wholly unbiased by party considerations.

We contemplate the lamentable political condition of our people, especially in the South, with grave and serious apprehensions for the future. Having been given the ballot for the protection of our rights, we find that, through systematic intimidation, outrage, violence, and murder, our votes have been suppressed, and the power thus given us has been made a weapon against us.

The migration of colored people now going on from several Southern States has assumed such proportions as to demand the calm and deliberate consideration of every thoughtful citizen in the country. It is the result of no idle curiosity or disposition to evade labor. It proceeds upon the assumption that there is a combination with well-planned and systematic purpose to still further abridge their rights and privileges and reduce them to a state of actual serfdom. It is declared in Holy Writ that the ox that treadeth out the corn shall not be muzzled. If their labor is valuable it should be respected. If it be demonstrated that it cannot command respect in the South, there is but one alternative, and that is to emigrate. But as the South possesses many advantages for them, they would prefer to remain where, if they could peacefully enjoy the rights and privileges to which they are legally entitled, and receive fair and equitable remuneration for their labor. The disposition to leave the communities in which they find insecure is an evidence of a healthy growth in manly independence, and should receive the commendation and support of all philanthropists. We therefore heartily indorse the National Emigration Aid Society recently organized at Washington, D. C., and bespeak for it a successful issue in its laudable undertaking. We view with grave alarm the recent action of the planters of Mississippi and Louisiana at the Vicksburg Convention to effect an adjustment of labor troubles existing in that section of the country, believing that through such a movement it is possible to establish friendly relations, adjust all differences between the races, and settle all questions of difficulty. The settlement of the grave causes underlying the unsettled and inharmonious condition of affairs now obtaining among them in the South. We would respectfully recommend to both classes the adoption of similar action in future for the settlement of all disturbing public questions which may arise between them.

Having said so much with regard to the disabilities under which we labor on account of influences over which we have no control, we are not unmindful of the all-important fact that we are, to a great extent, the architects of our own fortunes, and must rely mainly on our own exertions for success. We therefore recommend to the youth of our race the observance of strict morality, temperate habits, and the practice of economy; the acquisition of land, the acquiring of agricultural education, of advancing to mercantile positions, and of forming their way into the various productive channels of literature, art, science, and mechanism. The sooner the knowledge of ability to achieve success in these directions is acquired, the sooner we will overcome apparently insurmountable obstacles to our elevation. In the struggle for independence our blood mingled with that of the white man in defense of a common cause; when our flag was insulted on the high seas and national citizens outraged, we sprang promptly to our country's call in the war which followed; we did not stop to consider the fact that, although Americans, we were not free men. In the war of the rebellion, after emancipation, we responded by thousands in the country's defense, and on the high seas, in tented camps, and rifled parapets the prejudice of race and caste were forgotten in the heat of conflict, and the cause of secession disappeared beneath the bodies of white and black alike. In the light of these facts we demand in the name of the citizenship conferred upon us by organic law, and in the names of humanity and Christian brotherhood, the same treatment accorded to other nationalities of our common country. Nothing more, nothing less. If the Government has the right to call upon us to fight, it surely has the power to enforce the laws made for our protection. We have reached a crisis in the history of the race. With us it is a question of citizenship upheld by the moral sentiment of the country, and protected by its physical power, or of citizenship invaded and outraged, trifled at by vehemently vociferous demagogues and unscrupulous stifling the will of the majority in the interest of party ascendency.

More than that, it is a question of life and existence itself. We have submitted patiently to wrongs and outrages which have been heaped upon us, trusting that in the fullness of time generous and humane public sentiment would bring to our relief the enforcement of all laws passed for our protection. If the nation desires to maintain the proud position it has attained, it must prove to the world, that every man in our midst is equal, free and equal, and that means will be used to avenge the insults and outrages against the country's flag. And for the accomplishment of these ends we invoke the prayers and sympathies of all liberty-loving citizens.

Mr. Pinchback, in addressing the conference, predicted the nomination of Gen. Grant for the Presidency, which was received with immense enthusiasm. Ex-Congressman Rainey, of South Carolina, made a speech, in which he alluded to the action of the Vicksburg Convention and declared that the negroes would no longer trust to the promises of the Southern whites, which had always been broken. The address of the committee was unanimously adopted. Gov. Marks was invited within the bar, and was escorted thither by Messrs. Pinchback and Richard Allen, of Tennessee.

A resolution, approving the action of Judge Rives, of Virginia, in regard to colored jurors, was adopted. A resolution appointing a committee to prosecute a Tennessee railroad for not admitting the jubilee singers into a first-class car on a first-class ticket was adopted. J. Henri Burch, from the Committee on Emigration made a report which concludes as follows: "Your committee present to this Conference this report, and leave it with the members to decide whether or not colored people South have not about reached that point in their existence when they must decide whether to continue where they are with all the disadvantages surrounding them, with the experience of the past and the doubt and uncertainty of the future, or whether there shall be a going out of these oppressed people to those lands and among those people who will guarantee to colored as well as white to right the wrongs of all men, regardless of race or color, and vindicate their right to citizenship as fully as in any spot on God's green earth. This Conference must speak in no uncertainty manner on one side or the other. Our friends, our constituents, our enemies, and the whole country begins are waiting to hear the verdict from this Conference."

A STEAMBOAT ON THE UPPER DELAWARE.

DELAWARE, N. J., May 9.—The first steamer that ever came up the Delaware as high as this point passed about 5 o'clock this afternoon. As she went under the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad bridge, cheers arose gleamly a large crowd of spectators, and were answered by the waving of the national colors on board the boat. The vessel is a small side-wheeler, not quite 60 feet in length. It is named the Kittatinny, will carry about 75 passengers, and will ply between Port Jervis, Delaware Water Gap, Penn., and Port Jervis, N. Y.

A COLORED WOMAN MISSING.

Mrs. Wilson, a respectable colored woman, residing at No. 245 Wooster-st., called on Superintendent Walling yesterday, and reported the singular disappearance of her mother, Mrs. Sarah Hawley, who is 70 years of age. The old woman lives in Lee, Mass., and recently was on a visit to her daughter. On the 21st of April Mrs. Wilson accompanied her mother to the Grand Central Depot and put her on board the train. Since that time she has not seen or heard from her. Mrs. Hawley has not arrived at Lee, and her baggage has been at the depot at that place for a fortnight without a claimant appearing. On learning that her mother had not arrived home, Mrs. Wilson made inquiries at the Grand Central Depot. She found the conductor of the train on which her mother took passage, and he distinctly remembered Mrs. Hawley as among his passengers. He remembered particularly her leaving the train for the Wassaic or Wanscheer County, but has no further recollection of her. It is feared that the aged woman left the train before reaching her destination, but what has become of her since that time cannot be conjectured.

BLANQUI INTERVIEWED.

A TALK WITH THE FAMOUS CONSPIRATOR IN HIS PRISON.

A correspondent of the London Times has visited Blanqui in his prison at Clairvaux, and thus describes him:

"Never have I witnessed a greater contrast than that between the man I saw before me and the stir which his name has for the last few weeks created. There entered a short, thin, gray man in the strangest garb. He wore light sabots over dark socks, coffee-colored trousers; a coarse, unstarched linen shirt without collar, a knitted waistcoat, buttoned at the neck, but with no other button; a silk skull-cap the worse for wear, from beneath which was a yellowish cotton handkerchief nearly covering his forehead, and some of the fringe of which was scarcely distinguishable from his thick white hair. Clutched in his trembling right hand was a small hatchet, which he had just used for chopping wood, and which he let go only toward the end of our interview. His physiognomy curiously supplemented this fanciful garb. His head is short at the lower part, broad toward the temples, and cut off with a bristly white beard. His complexion is clear and rosy, his forehead broad, but low, and slightly compressed at the temples; his ears are rather delicate, his eyes long and fixed; his nose is thin at the top, broad and square below; his mouth wide, his lips red and his expression, though sometimes lit up with an agreeable smile, usually shows a kind of cynical curiosity. When, however, M. Duseurre told him who I was, and that I had come to talk with him, he lifted his singular dress with his left hand, still grasping the hatchet with his right, began to smile, and after a moment's surprise, said to me: 'These, every door is open to you, and you have come here to satisfy the insatiable curiosity of the great English journal?' 'No,' I replied; 'it is not mere curiosity which brings me hither. Your name is everywhere, and I come to ascertain from yourself the truth respecting you.' The Governor and Chief Warder withdrew, and left us alone.

The political opinions of the aged conspirator may be gathered from the portion of the conversation which follows:

"'I am not a professor of politics or socialism; I am a man of action. When exists in back-ground thing also must take its place, and gradually things will become what they ought to be. The revolutionary party will apply the necessary reforms. First and foremost France must be nonchristianized. She must be rid, not only of Catholicism, but of Christianity. The Catholics are now the masters. We have still the Inquisition. It no longer burns, but it imprisons. The magistrates sentence according to its orders. Journalists are condemned because they turn religion into derision. It ought to be allowable to turn religion into derision in the name of reason. I have seen a journalist condemned because he had said there was no force without matter and no matter without force. It is abominable. The real conspirators are the Catholics and the Clericals. See how they are conspiring as to the Ferry bill, which will never be enforced. From the Bishop to the Beadle they are all activ. The priests' salaries must be abolished; that will be a beginning.' 'Do you then, admit an atheistic State?' 'Why not? The law is atheistic.' 'No, the law protects all. It is not atheistic. It does not affirm, but it does not deny.' 'Well, the State should be atheistic, for I maintain that the law is so.' 'Would you rather believe in pay the expenses of their worship?' 'Yes, but not by subscriptions.' 'Would you leave the churches open?' 'Yes, but watch the preaching.' 'But what substitute would you find for worship?' 'Voltaire has already given it.' 'Voltaire of a monster, and they ask me what I shall put in its place.' 'But your measures against Catholicism are not enough to form a programme.' 'You are always thinking of a programme. I have no programme. A thing is bad, I substitute something less bad, I see to the application of it. Taxation is bad, it must be modified. He who works must be relieved, he who possesses taxed salaries being at the same time augmented, and then you restore the equilibrium.' 'But then you destroy property.' 'No; I certainly tax capital, and I forbid the reconstruction of large properties. There must at the same time be a great revision of the press and public meetings to discuss all the reforms. 'That is to say, you would cover France with a network of tyrannical clubs, which would destroy liberty, and with a press which would advocate utopias.' 'It is always with those phrases that concessions are refused to the spirit of revolution which is the spirit of modern times.' 'Do you share the theories of those who desire the abolition of standing armies, the community of goods, and all those monstrous doctrines which will not bear examination? I think the expenditure must be reduced and pensions abolished, and armies are a cause of crime and a menace to liberty.' 'Yes, but would you advise France to disarm in existing circumstances?' 'No; but she must be armed differently.' 'Do you believe in a nation armed and responding to the appeal of the country?' 'No; the Army must not be a mob, but France must be formed Epicoucd.' 'Would you abolish duties?' 'I think it ridiculous to style a Minister "His Excellency." 'Are you shocked at the word "Monsieur," also?' 'No, that is immaterial. I remember that in 1849 Charivari had a caricature of two men, one of whom said to the other, "Monsieur, je vous défends de m'appeler Citoyen." 'Citoyen, je vous défends de m'appeler Monsieur.' But it is immaterial to me, citoyen or Monsieur.' 'If you go out, will you speak much in public?' 'Yes, if there are clubs, otherwise I do not care about it.' 'Have you often spoken in public?' 'Yes; during the siege I was much listened to.' 'Do you write much?' 'No; in prison it never occurs to me to write.' 'Do you think the Chamber will confirm your election?' 'I know nothing about it. Individually the Chamber perhaps has intelligence, but as a whole it is very poor, and so was the National Assembly.' 'I do not agree with you. The Assembly contained superior men—Thiers, Louis Blanc, De Broglie, Buffet, Jules Simon.' He stopped me ironically, 'You call Jules Simon an intelligent man; a man who ascends the tribune to submit a programme, and in a country where the press, the electors, the elected, the entire nation, is divided into Republicans and Conservatives, says, amid the applause of the Assembly, 'I am profoundly Republican, but profoundly a Conservative.' That ought to destroy a man, it is so ridiculous.' 'He meant that he was not revolutionary.' 'That is what I reproached him with.' 'You will soon probably be released.' 'I do not think so; they are too anxious to keep me.' 'No, I think you will leave, but not before the 14th of June.' 'Ah, they want to prevent my being a Deputy.' 'Well, you want to prevent them from governing; it is very natural they should not make you eligible; but after the 23 of June I believe you will be liberated.' 'Who knows if even then they will let me go! But they are talking of an amnesty everybody, for the thing will always have to be begun over again.' 'If you were Deputy, what would you do?' 'You would propose the unlimited amnesty, separation of Church and State, the Tribune of the Commune or federation; you would have nobody with you in the Chamber.' 'There are very few indeed; but by degrees all that would change, the electors would return a revolutionary majority, and then—' I changed the conversation. He spoke of his health, of the heart disease, which obliged him to live only on fruits, vegetables, milk, and eggs. He seemed at bottom to discount the food given him—the menu of old prisoners. I rose feeling ill at once beside this obstinate mind full of dreams of demolition, and with only negative theories of reconstitution."

ADVOCATING TEMPERANCE.

THE NATIONAL SOCIETY'S WORK.

FOURTEENTH ANNIVERSARY EXERCISES—STATISTICS OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC—THE MODERATION SOCIETY DISCUSSED.

The Broadway Tabernacle was crowded to overflowing with a highly respectable audience, composed in great part of ladies, last evening, the occasion being the fourteenth anniversary of the National Temperance Society and Publication House. The annual election of officers was held in the afternoon, and the Hon. William E. Dodge was re-elected President, J. N. Stearns, Secretary, and H. B. Spellman, Treasurer. The list of Vice-Presidents includes distinguished clergymen and laymen from all parts of the country. The New-Yorkers are the Rev. Drs. Ormiston, Talmage, Taylor, Hall, Johnson, Hepworth, Stryker, Scudder, Fulton, Paton, Bevan, Holbrook, and Fowler; Bishops Fallows and Harris, Dr. Willard Parker, the Rev. A. D. Vail, Gen. J. S. Smith, and Messrs. James A. Briggs, R. H. McCurdy, James Talbott, Daniel Mayes, J. H. Kellogg, George W. Bungay, Nathan Bishop, W. A. Booth, and John Dongall. The Managers elect are: For three years—The Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, John O'Donnell, the Rev. W. C. Steele, the Rev. Dr. George L. Taylor, the Rev. Dr. J. O. Peck, the Rev. Albert G. Lawson, R. H. Royes, J. Finley Smith, and A. A. Robbins, of New-York, and the Rev. Dr. J. B. Dunn, of Massachusetts; for two years, (to fill vacancies)—The Rev. C. L. Wells and C. R. Blaskall, of New-York. These gentlemen and others, including the venerable Thurlow Weed, occupied seats on the platform in the evening. The proceedings were opened with two stanzas of the hymn "Rally for the Right." President Hopkins, of Williamstown, then offered prayer, and Mr. Dodge delivered an address, in the course of which he said that he had made careful measurements, and had found that the rum shops of New-York, if placed side by side, and allowing each to occupy a 25-foot lot, would extend from the Battery up Broadway and Ninth-avenue to High Bridge; down Tenth-avenue, Hudson and Greenwich streets to the Battery again; up Pearl-street, the Bowery, and Third-avenue to Harlem, and back to the Battery, or 24¾ miles in all. He urged his hearers to use their votes to put a stop to the traffic. In conclusion, he read from THE TIMES's Washington correspondence a description of how Mrs. President Hayes gave a reception at which no wines were served, and he called upon all ladies to imitate her example. He was loudly applauded. Secretary Stearns then read extracts from the annual report of the society, in which a hopeful view is taken of the progress toward prohibition accomplished during the year. The receipts (including $4,327 55 in donations), were $45,877 83, and the expenditures $45,824 74, leaving cash on hand $53 09. The present indebtedness of the society is about $10,000. The amount of donations was the smallest in the history of the society. A permanent fund of $100,000 is asked for. The total of pages of temperance matter printed during the year was 24,371,370, and since the organization of the society, 413,335,518. Over 600 different publications are now on the catalogue of the society. During the year, 48 different books, tracts, and pamphlets were issued, and many more would have been, but for lack of funds. Among these, were 12,400 copies of eight new Sabbath-school books, making 92 now on the catalogue; 9 new bibles, making 90 now on the catalogue, besides 140,000 copies monthly of the Youth's Temperance Banner, and numerous lesson leaves, concert exercises, catechisms, juvenile manuals, leaflets, pledge-cards, rolls of honor, &c., and cheap pamphlet editions of several standard works. The District Secretary for the Middle States traveled 18,418 miles, delivered 215 sermons and addresses, collected $706 43 as donations, and made direct sales of the society's publications, amounting to $746. Several conventions were communicated, and steps are being taken to develop this branch of the service. Three thousand dollars' worth of printed matter was circulated free during the year. Anniversary temperance sermons were preached by many ministers in New-York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and Chicago on the first Sabbath in May, in response to an invitation sent out by the society. The report also considers in detail the various phases of the liquor traffic, the progress in national and State legislation on the subject, the awakened interest of the Church in favor of temperance, the growing activity of the women in the cause, and many other germane topics.

After the hymn "Rescue the Perishing" had been sung, Mr. Brower read a series of resolutions adopted at the meeting in the afternoon, hailing "as an encouraging sign the movement for the promotion of abstinence, temperance, moderation in other times, and the abolition of the injurious system of treating," but reaffirming that "in total abstinence only is there wisdom and safety for all;" denouncing in strong terms the Excise bill now pending before the Assembly; advocating constitutional amendments to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors throughout the United States, and favoring scientific instruction concerning the nature of alcohol and its effects on the human system in all schools, public and private. Each resolution was loudly applauded. Bishop Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, was then introduced. He drew a strong picture of the evils of the liquor traffic, spoke in high terms of woman's influence in the cause, praised the objects of the new "Moderation Society," and argued that prohibition had proved a success in Maine. One stanza of the hymn, "The Temperance Reformer," followed. At this point the Rev. Dr. Talmage entered and was received with loud and repeated applause from all over the church. The Rev. Dr. Peck was the next spea

OUT-DOOR LIFE.

WILD LIFE IN A SOUTHERN COUNTRY. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 16mo, pp. 302. THE GAME-KEEPER AT HOME. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 12mo, pp. 324. LOCUSTS AND WILD HONEY. By John Burroughs. Boston: Houghton, Osgood & Co. Square 16mo, pp. 252.

The best writers upon rural life and natural history are those who are drawn to these subjects by a certain natural instinct, and their personal interests in the life and scenery which they enjoy is the secret of the abiding interest which their writings excite. These subjects never lose their fascination, never cease to attract both old and young. Whether such knowledge is used to fill in the background of a novel, or is made the substance of a work on out-door life, it does not matter. There is always a freshness in these subjects. Nature is never far from us, and he who sees most in nature is sure of a hearing. It is for the lovers and students of nature that these volumes were written. The author of "Wild Life in a Southern Country" and of "The Gamekeeper at Home" does for English life what Mr. Burroughs does for the same sort of life in this country. It is the plan of each to study the quaint habits of the people, the ways of the inhabitants of the animal world, the whole range of the out-door life by which we are surrounded. The English writer, who conceals his identity under the initials R. J., first contributed the chapters of "Wild Life" to the Pall Mall Gazette, where they attracted much attention, and provoked comparison with Gilbert White's "Natural History of Selborne." He is painstaking rather than brilliant, and almost too much of a literalist to let his imagination play adequately with his subject. The interest in his sketches comes chiefly from the minuteness and freshness of his personal observation. There is no attempt at fine or even poetical writing, but the author has a certain delicacy and tact which seem to be the natural endowments of those who study out-door life at first hand. His object is to picture the frontier lines of civilization in England, to sketch life on the farms and in the secluded hamlets, to find out what lives in the woods, what swims in the stream, what creeps on the ground, or flies through the air, in short, to put into writing what comes to any careful observer on an English down during a Summer's day. It is inevitable that such a work should run into detail, and at times be commonplace, but when a writer of real insight attempts to describe nature's children as unrestrained in their wild, free life as they were in the veritable backwoods of primitive England, he can scarcely fail to make himself interesting. He sees more than others have seen, or he sees the old places and studies the animals, the flowers, the insects, from a different point of view. One feels that he has a fresh companion and that another pair of eyes is better than his own. It is the stepping out of what is common, it is the insight of a truly unconventional writer, that gives the charm to these books. He opens phases of life with which we are not familiar, and delights us more by the happy surprises of fresh knowledge than by any special skill in making pictures. And this is as true of "The Gamekeeper at Home," which took the English public almost by storm, as it is of the later volume. "The Gamekeeper" is a unique character in English country life, and the sketch here given, from actual observation, not only of the gamekeeper's life, but of his careful studies in the animal world, is bright and picturesque. The author presents features in rural England both on the farms and on the great estates which have been the least subject to change, and in which the old customs and usages have free play. It is such a description of English life as can hardly be found elsewhere.

Mr. Burroughs, in his previous volumes, has won for himself, since Thoreau's death, a field which is peculiarly his own. Far more than R. J., he brings to his descriptions of out-door life a certain wit and sprightliness which give point and attractiveness to his essays. It is not easy to stop reading when once you begin. And yet nothing is forced; there is no appearance of effort; the writer tells only what he has seen or knows; he does not remind you that he is a literary man. Whether he is fishing for trout, or watching bees, or picking strawberries, or camping out in the woods, or studying the habits of birds, or exploring the wilds of Canada, he has something to say which nobody before has said so well. He is far less precise than R. J. In fact, he often reminds one of Charles Lamb in the play of his humor, and drops as easily as Washington Irving used to into the vein of idyllic writing. There is nothing morbid, nothing sensational, nothing said for effect, in his pages; nor is he limited in his range of observation by the passion of a specialist. He unites a great deal of fresh knowledge with the keenest zest for out-door sports. The essays are thoroughly American, free from any suggestion of bookishness, and the natural expression of the man. Even Thoreau does not excel him in delicate observation and minute touches.

Each of these books is sure of a moderate, if not a large, popularity, and will be as interesting and valuable 10 years hence as it is now. No better volumes can be taken in hand for Summer reading. The living teacher may do more and better for us than any book, but next to him these are the books which educate us to use our eyes and teach us how to study and enjoy out-door life. They contain the essence of what is enjoyable in nature, and if they are so full of what is delightful in personality as to defy the skill of the reviewer, for this very reason they are all the more interesting to those who can read them, under the trees, in the refreshing coolness of a day which is "the bridal of the earth and sky."

THE RENAISSANCE IN ITALY.

THE RENAISSANCE IN ITALY. THE FINE ARTS. By John Addington Symonds. New-York: Henry Holt & Co. 1879.

From writing books of picturesque travel in Greece and Italy, the pens of Mr. Symonds have been onward through studies of Italian mediæval literature and set to a series of volumes of wider scope and stronger flux, designed to embrace the causes and phenomena of what is called the Renaissance. "The Age of the Despots," and "The Revival of Learning" are already written; the present work, now for the first time edited here, is the third, and still another is to treat on "Italian Literature." Mr. Symonds is also known as a close translator of the sonnets of Michael Angelo, and the author of an "Introduction to the Study of Dante."

It is the aim of this author to set forth one main theory about the Italians, namely, that they were painters, not merely in the common sense, that is to say, not merely pre-eminent as painters, but that their genius for painting was so strong that they subordinated the arts, and even their literature, to this pictorial bent. The Greeks were more sculptors than anything else; the Italians were painters. Their architecture lent itself through its wide spaces and elaborate decoration to the same ruling passion, and their literature showed a like tendency. Critics endowed with a less lively sensibility to beauty of outline and harmony of form than the Italians, says Mr. Symonds, complain that their poetry lacks substantial qualities. Only by long familiarity with the plastic arts of their contemporaries do we come to understand the ground assumed by Ariosto and Politiano. We then perceive that these poets were not so much unable — instinctively unwilling to go beyond a certain circle of effects. They subordinated their work to the ideal of their age, and that ideal was one to which a painter rather than a poet might successfully aspire. A succession of pictures harmoniously composed and delicately toned to please the mental eye satisfied the taste of the Italians. But however exquisite in design, rich in color, and complete in execution this literary work may be, it strikes a Northern student as wanting in the highest elements of genius—sublimity of imagination, dramatic passion, energy, and earnestness of purpose.

This fundamental idea is developed by the author through many good arguments and fine parallels. But for the giants of Italian literature and art he is often compelled to make exceptions to his generalizations. For Michael Angelo and Dante he is disposed to place stations apart, on the piles that their genius was so phenomenal that common rules cannot apply to them. And yet he shows their relations to other poets and artists, and exhibits them fitting into the general movement of their age, although towering far above their fellows. Mr. Symonds is inclined to judge severely of Michael Angelo, just as Mr. Ruskin has been doing, and, while assigning him a high place apart, considers his work full of misleading qualities that exerted a pernicious influence on the artists of succeeding days. He does not go so far as that impetuous painter in words, Ruskin; he does not assail Michael Angelo and laud Botticelli to the skies; but he holds that Michael Angelo justified by his own work the extravagances committed afterward; his heart is plainly with the most ascetic of the mediæval painters, and the sensuous in art is to him a matter of great uneasiness. In fact Mr. Symonds boldly states that the Christianity of Christ is radically opposed to the fine arts; the latter consisting of appeals to to the senses, while the kernel of the former is self-repression, asceticism. Even the spiritual paintings of Fra Angelico were found to carry away the thoughts of fair penitents from heaven. We are told how a certain beautiful Saint Sebastian had to be removed from a church because the confessional revealed that the sight of it led women's thoughts back to the world and the devil. The master-pieces of Domenichino, Ribera, and other Bolognese and Neapolitan painters are meant to awake compassion for the martyrs, but they really pander to a lust for blood. Titian and Correggio dwell on the delight of youthful faces, blooming color, graceful movement, delicate emotion. These things are not compatible with Christianity.

"As in ancient Greece, so also in Renaissance Italy, the fine arts assumed the first place in the intellectual life of the nation. But the thought and feeling of the modern world required an æsthetic medium more capable of expressing emotion in its intensity, variety, and subtlety than sculpture. Therefore painting was the art par excellence of Italy. Yet even painting, notwithstanding the range and wealth of its resources, could not deal with the motives of Christianity so successfully as sculpture with the myths of paganism. * * * Painting had to omit the very pith and kernel of Christianity, as conceived by devout, uncompromising purists. Nor did it do what the Church would have desired. Instead of reviving the fetters of ecclesiastical authority, instead of enforcing mysticism and asceticism, it really restored to humanity the sense of its own dignity and beauty, and helped to prove the untenability of the mediæval stand-point."

The Greeks having pre-empted sculpture and the Renaissance painting, the only art left for the moderns is music. While Mr. Symonds proves himself everywhere a close student and no mean thinker on the Renaissance, his book is very far from being an epoch-maker on the subject. He is plainly a man of very excellent taste, but neither a profound delver into the old lore, like some of the Germans, nor a bold lecturer on matters of individual opinion, like Mr. Ruskin. He stands somewhere between the two, and while now and then we see the influence on style and thought of the pre-Raphaelites and their leader in literature, for the most part he is far more sober and restrained than they. He seldom indulges in fine writing, and generally impresses the reader with his thoroughness. We can often feel him putting on the curb in his fear of going beyond the measured pace of a critic. Necessarily going over the old ground so handsomely covered by Villani, Vasari, and Lanzi, he is, nevertheless, interesting and fresh. Instead of adhering closely to painting as a historian would, he is always weaving into it the parallel threads of Italian literature, and so manages to give variety to a theme that might otherwise prove tedious. Even Vasari, with all his anecdotes, is hard to read consecutively.

There seems, if not a fallacy, then a certain narrowness in writers on the fine arts when they assail one or another artist of the past for having introduced a disastrous movement in art. If they were great in their day, and part of their greatness consisted in the use of methods that could be readily abused, overdone, exaggerated, that was no fault of theirs. The error lay in the smallness of their successors, who did not imitate them except in trivialities or externals. Mr. Symonds is so great a Puritan that he inveighs against Ghiberti for having introduced on his famous gates to the Baptistery of Florence a species of bas-relief which departed from the severe simplicity of the antique, and partook, in a measure, of the nature of painting. He admires Donatello by as much as he criticises Ghiberti, although at the same time giving us to understand that his admiration is also very great for the far-renowned gates of the latter. But these exaggerations in the line of his theories are slight matters in comparison with the substantial merits of his performance. This book is a very important contribution to the number of thoughtful and thorough works on the period of bloom in Italian art. It is much to be hoped that the same firm which has edited it in such handsome shape will find it possible to issue the other three volumes by Mr. Symonds embraced under the general title of "Renaissance in Italy."

EIGHT YEARS IN STATE PRISON.

Felix Holt, a fireman, who says he lives at No. 233 East Thirty-fourth-street, was arraigned on a charge of highway robbery, in the General Sessions Court, yesterday. On the night of the 4th inst. Holt, in company with two accomplices, attacked Albert Nolte, of No. 62 Canal-street, seized him by the throat, and struck him. While one of the thieves held Mr. Nolte, the others robbed him of his watch and chain, and all ran off. Mr. Nolte, however, raised an alarm, and kept Holt in view until he was arrested by Officer Thomas Marty, of the Steam-boat Squad. The prisoner pleaded guilty, and said he was drunk when he committed the offence. He had worked steadily all Winter down South, he said, and had only been 10 days off the City of Savannah when arrested. He had never committed a crime before, he said, and hoped the court would be lenient. Judge Cowing said that Holt had commenced his career of crime by committing one of the most atrocious offences known to the law, inviting a penalty of 20 years in State Prison. In consideration of its being his first offence, his Honor sentenced the prisoner to eight years in State Prison.

POLICEMEN'S STATIONARY POSTS.

In an endeavor to break up a house of assignation which had been established recently by a Mrs. Googin in East Thirteenth-street, a highly respectable neighborhood, Capt. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, stationed a Policeman in full uniform in front of her door to warn persons from entering the place, and at night to flash a lantern in their faces. This made Mrs. Googin very indignant, and she applied to Superintendent Walling to have the man removed. The Superintendent upheld the action of Capt. Williams and refused Mrs. Googin's request. The persistent woman, who, it is said, was backed by powerful political influence, applied to the Commissioners to redress her grievance, but as the man still remained in front of her house, she applied to Judge Donohue, of the Supreme Court, for an injunction to restrain the Police authorities from stationing a Policeman on a street in front of her house, which she admitted was used for assignation purposes. Before Judge Donohue rendered his decision, Gen. Smith introduced a resolution prohibiting any officer of the Police from making arrests for bets without first obtaining permission from the Board of Police. Under this resolution, Capt. Williams withdrew the obnoxious policeman, and then Judge Donohue rendered a decision refusing the injunction prayed for. The subject came up before the Board of Police at the meeting on Monday, on the question of Capt. McCullagh, of the Seventeenth Precinct, in stationing a man in front of certain stables in his precinct to prevent swindling. Commissioner MacLean moved that the resolution adopted April 8, prohibiting officers of the department making stationary posts without permission from the Board of Police, be repealed. This motion prevailed, Commissioner Smith voting in the negative. So the policeman will probably return to Mrs. Googin's door, provided she has not removed in the meantime.

A DEAF AND DUMB EXHIBITION.

THE SON OF ONE OF THE SIAMESE TWINS DESCRIBES THE BOND BETWEEN THEM.

The attendance at the Broadway Tabernacle yesterday afternoon, on the occasion of the anniversary exercises of the New-York Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb, was very large. So general was the desire to witness the exercises that all the pews were occupied long before the opening prayer. On the platform and at either side of the pulpit were seated 100 pupils of the institution. The majority of them looked very intelligent, and all appeared well-bred. After a brief prayer, which was interpreted in the sign language by Dr. Peet, the Principal, the Rev. Dr. William Adams, President of the Board of Directors, said that the main object of the institution is to give deaf-mutes not only a common-school education but also to instruct them in all useful arts, in order to enable them to earn for themselves an independent and honorable livelihood. By means of the peculiar system of education pursued, the children present had attained a degree of general knowledge equal to that of school children of the same age having full possession of the faculties of speech and hearing. After the close of the Rev. Dr. Adams's remarks, an interesting exhibition was given by the boys and girls, under the personal direction of Dr. Peet and his assistants, several of the latter being themselves deaf-mutes. Primary instruction in the rudiments of the sign language was aptly illustrated by seven little boys, who, on entering the school at the age of 6 years, did not know their own names, and were totally unable to express ordinary ideas. One of them, on being shown a clasp-knife, wrote on a blackboard, in a fair round-hand, the following description of that article: "This is a knife. It is a new knife. It is not an old one. It is very sharp. I think a man made it." A class of larger boys who have just reached the second year in their study of the English language, and who on entering the institution 18 months ago were absolutely ignorant of every kind of words, wrote simple but perfectly grammatical compositions. Charles McCormack, a deaf-mute, expressed ideas and answered questions in a perfectly intelligible way by means of articulation and labiology, according to the rules of Bell's system of visible speech. His vocabulary is, however, still limited. Miss Florence Jones, also a deaf-mute, who is to graduate in the Summer, interpreted one of Moore's Irish melodies in the sign language, and a song of some of the best Scottish poetry wrote a description of the physical deformity which bound his father and his uncle together for life. A sister of this young man, who is also a deaf-mute, is an inmate of an institution in North Carolina. The exhibition terminated with a repetition of the Doxology and the Lord's Prayer in connected signs.

MARY BROWN'S DISAPPEARANCE.

INVESTIGATION WHICH SEEMS TO SHOW HER DEATH WAS ACCIDENTAL.

Detective James Thompson, of the Central Office, has been engaged for several weeks in investigating the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Mary Brown, the wife of a coal dealer at No. 124 Monroe-street, who disappeared from her home on the 15th of February last, and whose body was subsequently found floating in the water of Granville, Monmouth County, N. J. There were two scalp wounds on the woman, and, upon this fact, a theory was formed that the woman had been murdered and thrown overboard. The locality of the murder was given as the foot of Fifteenth-street, East River, and it was reported that the hands of the canal-boats lying there and the watchmen at the Manhattan Gas-works in the vicinity had seen a struggle between a woman and several men at that place. Detective Thompson yesterday reported to Superintendent Walling that he had seen and conversed with the men on the canal-boats and the watchman at the gas-works, and was sure that there had been no trouble with a woman there on the night in question. The detective also learned that on the day of her disappearance Mrs. Brown was on board the canal-boat De Graf, owned by her brother-in-law, plying at the bulkhead between Eighteenth and Nineteenth-streets, East River, and drawing beer there. She then left for her home, and while attempting either to ascend or descend the stairway at her residence she fell down stairs, and was found at the bottom of the stairways by a young man named Lynch, who resided in the same house. In this fall she probably cut her head, as the stairs are partly covered with metal. Lynch assisted to her own apartments. When her husband came home that evening, he found that his supper had not been prepared for him. He upbraided his wife for her neglect, and finally ejected her from the apartments. She then left the house, saying that she was going to her brother-in-law's house. After dark that night a woman answering the description of Mrs. Brown was seen by Rudolph Varlet, a German living at No. 301 Avenue C, going down Eighteenth-street toward the East River, and crossing an open lot there toward the bulkhead. Some afterwards he heard a splash in the water, but he paid no attention to it. From the facts discovered by the detective, Superintendent Walling is convinced that the woman was not murdered, but that she fell overboard while endeavoring to reach her brother-in-law's canal-boat.

A POLICEMAN REBUKED.

ARRESTING HIS STEP-DAUGHTER FOR DISORDERLY CONDUCT.

A singular case came before Justice Wandell yesterday, in the Tombs Police Court. Officer Lally, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, arraigned before the magistrate his step-daughter, whom he had locked up the night previous on a charge of disorderly conduct. The girl, whose name is Frances Golding, presented a respectable appearance, and when the circumstances of her arrest became known in court, much sympathy was aroused in her behalf. Addressing the complainant, Justice Wandell said: "Well, officer, what complaint do you make against this girl?" "Your Honor, she follows me on my rounds all the time, and annoys me. Last night she followed me all around and used the most horrible language imaginable. I told her to go away, and she wouldn't, and then I arrested her."

"That is untrue, Judge," said the girl. "I never used bad language, but he has abandoned my mother, and because she is starving I want to him to ask him for some money."

"Officer, is this girl your daughter?" asked the magistrate.

"She is my step-daughter, and her mother is a habitual drunkard."

"She is not a drunkard," said the girl, with indignation; "but you left her to starve on the streets, while you paid $15 a week for another woman in the hospital."

Justice Wandell thought he had heard enough, and told the prisoner she could go. Frances left the court, followed by her irate step-father. The parties had hardly been gone two minutes, when Officer Lally made his appearance in court again, having rearrested his step-daughter. He charged her with abusing and threatening him, an accusation which the girl denied in the most emphatic terms. Justice Wandell very plainly informed Officer Lally that his course was ill-advised, and that the arrest was an unjustifiable one. The magistrate also told the policeman that if he had any complaint to make against his step-daughter, to apply for a warrant in the usual way, and not to exercise the official power vested in himself. Frances was again discharged, and her step-father followed her out of court in a most disconsolate state of mind.

A SNOW-BALL WITH A STONE IN IT.

On Jan. 23, Denis McCarthy, a lad, threw a snow-ball, which had a stone in it, at Charles Thomas, aged 9, of No. 42 Stanton-street. The missile struck Thomas on the forehead, over the right eye, and produced a wound from which he died on the 6th inst. Coroner Woltman yesterday held an inquest in the case, and the jury finding a verdict against McCarthy in accordance with the above facts, without finding that he had had any evil intention at the time he threw the snow-ball, he was placed under $250 bail to await the action of the Grand Jury.

SENATE.

EPIDEMIC DISEASES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Tennessee, from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, reported a substitute for the bill heretofore recommended to it to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States.

PAYMENTS TO CAPT. EADS.

Mr. BECK, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the House bill, with amendment, making provision for the payment of sums of money, heretofore appropriated to James B. Eads and his associates, for the construction of jetties and other works at the South Pass of the Mississippi. The bill was passed.

THE USE OF TROOPS AT THE POLLS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. announced the pending bill to be the bill from the House to prohibit military interference at elections.

Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, called attention to specified clauses of the Constitution with regard to elections and the powers of the President, and caused to be read the statutes authorizing the appointment of Marshals and defining their duties, and also the laws authorizing the President to employ military and naval forces to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, and execute the laws. These acts were, he said, passed respectively during the Administrations of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln. He likewise caused to be read the act of 1865, which imposes fine and imprisonment on any military, naval, or civil officer who brings troops or armed men to the polls, unless to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace, and which makes it unlawful for them to prescribe or attempt to prescribe the qualifications of voters. Mr. EDMUNDS also called attention to sections from the acts of 1866, 1870, and 1871, authorizing the President to employ the Army and naval forces and the Militia to protect voters in the exercise of their rights, and to punish persons who fraudulently vote at Congressional elections. Other laws were referred to, including that which prohibits any portion of the Army from being used as a posse comitatus for the execution of laws, unless its employment is expressly authorized by the Constitution and act of Congress in certain cases and under certain circumstances. Mr. Edmunds then read extracts from the Federalist to show that Hamilton and Madison maintained that the Government ought to possess the means for its own preservation, and that Congress has power over the election of members of the House of Representatives. Quotations were also read from President Jackson's Message of 1833, relative to the obstructions to the execution of the laws in South Carolina, and from the writings of Judge Story, to show that the duty of the Government became the measure of its power.

Mr. EDMUNDS said he had read from the Constitution and from a series of laws those parts which bore on the power of the Executive Department to show that from the beginning of the Government it had been conceded and maintained that wherever there is law there must be power to carry it into effect. And there still existed express authority for the President to exert the military powers of the Government wherever the execution of the laws on all occasions and everywhere, is obstructed by combinations too powerful for the civil authorities to suppress. The United States Marshals, too, have express power to command all necessary assistance in the performance of their duty, the power being the same as that of Sheriffs of the respective States. The Executive was not a tyrant, but a civil officer, and was authorized to exercise all the force at his command for the due execution of the laws made in pursuance of the Constitution, which he is bound to preserve, protect, and defend. The preservation of the peace was not arbitrary. The state of order and tranquillity was found in the due enforcement of the laws. President Jackson announced the possession of the power conferred by the Constitution and the laws passed in pursuance of it, when in 1833 the people of South Carolina set up their will and dominion against the execution of the national laws. The same arguments and pretexts, the same defiance, the same claim of the exercise of State sovereignty and State rights—the same old heresies are reproduced on all occasions, and often in the same language that was employed at that time. He repeated there was express authority to exert all the force of which the Republic is capable to prevent infractions of the law. If the elections fail or are prevented, what becomes of the Republic and the liberty of its citizens? Justice may fail, the courts may be closed by armed hands; but when the power of the law overcomes opposition, nobody has lost anything except by delay. But if you destroy the fountain of power, the Republic is at an end. If, therefore, there be any distinction between one part of the law and another, when the military and civil power should be particularly exerted on occasions when a citizen of the Republic is to perform a public trust, as a component part of the Republic, and when he can freely and honestly participate in the choice of members of the House of Representatives, as well as in the choice of members of the Legislature, which elects United States Senators, the law of 1798 afforded all necessary power to protect the citizen from violence, and in the possession of his rights, and covered all the power or none to protect, preserve, and defend the Constitution, and maintain the public tranquillity. If we, said Mr. Edmunds, surrender at this time one thing esteemed to be so small by some, and so great by those who seek to carry their scheme through, we surrender all. If you follow the red rag in the title of the bill, for fear the people will think that you are opposed to liberty unless you pass a bill prohibiting military interference at elections, the capture of your fortress would be at every election rally. Mr. Edmunds then proceeded to analyze the bill, and said that the preamble was contradictory of its body. The preamble declared that "the presence of troops at the polls is contrary to the spirit of our institutions and the traditions of our people, and tends to destroy the freedom of elections," while the body of the bill declared that troops might be present at the polls even on election days, in the manner and under the circumstances the Constitution provides. If the preamble be true, the body is false.

Mr. Edmunds said, in reply to the Senators who had preceded him, that the Government does not enter a State. It is in every fibre of the muscle of every man. He wished it was in the hearts of all men of the Republic. [Applause.] The bill reflected the doctrines of those who supported it, namely, that this Government, nearly a century old, hoary with renown, after so long vindicating its right to exist, should be treated as an ostracous neighbor, and sometimes as a friend or foe. "I denounce such a doctrine," said Mr. Edmunds. "The Army is, in the end, the power of the law. Men have denounced the effective power of the Constitution to regulate the election of members of the House of Representatives, and by sophistry they fritter away the traditions of the Constitution, and deny the teachings of its framers, and say there is no liberty unless it be obtained by the supremacy of State rights. Was there not a scheme on foot to prevent appeals from State to Federal courts, thus taking away the rights of citizens? Where are you going to stop? I have seen within the last two or three days in this chamber another step in deprive a portion of the people of their rights. I have seen the majority of this body enter upon the consideration of a measure whatever of the conditions of the Senate, the spirit of the Constitution and the safety of the Republic, and declared to overturn the decision that gave to the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. Kellogg) his seat in order that a different man may take his place. Do you in a mandatory manner in your hour of triumph intend to sweep away everything which the wisdom of our fathers achieved and the valor of their sons conserved? The bill before us was the first step in that direction. There is somewhere in the Constitution, unless we go into anarchy, a power which, in spite of threats, will stand as a fortwork against the effort to break down the Constitution and laws, and when you sense of your emotions you will have the peace of which the act of 1865 speaks. But you will have peace at the polls only when you recognize by deed, as well as by word, the political equality of all citizens, and the free right of lawfully voting under the law and for the law. It will not be the peace of the sense of terror and of the grave, but the peace of justice and liberty asserted in legal form for the expression of the public will, when bygones will be bygones, and peace and harmony every where prevail." [Applause.]

MR. BLAINE ON STATE RIGHTS.

Mr. BLAINE, of Maine, said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: I want to make a single remark on the bill itself, if there is to be a vote upon it, although my remarks may be merely a repetition of what has been so admirably said by the honorable Senator from Vermont. I desire simply to put a proposition point in the language of things as they are now going on. I want your consideration what is to mark the high tide which the student doctrine of State rights in resolutions in this chamber and in this Chamber. This question has engaged the attention of the American people for just about 50 years. It has had its ups and its downs, its victories and its defeats. It was triumphed for the time by Jackson. It was dallied with by Van Buren. It rose to full strength under Polk and Pierce and Buchanan. It marshaled itself for a deadly struggle under Breckinridge, and, if I mistake not, a majority of Senators who sit on that side of the Chamber supported Breckinridge when he embodied that deadly heresy. In whatever there was in the issue between Calhoun and Jackson, that side of the Senate Chamber represents Calhoun. Whatever there was in the contest dividing the Democratic Party between Breckinridge and Douglas, that side of the chamber represents all the evil there was in the policy of Breckinridge, and I desire here to affirm and point out, that there never was before the rebellion—there never was at any time in the history of this country—any such assertion of State rights—any such assertion of mastery of the State Government over the Federal Government in its own domain as is here asserted by the heirs lineal of Calhoun and of Breckinridge. I shall not debate this bill. It were useless. It has been exhaustively debated. The whole measure is a removal of the Federal Government from its proper domain and the installation of the States into degrees of power that were not dreamed of by Calhoun and were not asserted by Breckinridge. We thought there had been something gained on this question in a costly war and in amendments to the Constitution; but the tide, as it now sweeps, is on the ebb, and the power of the Union—the power of the Federal Government—was never so weak as these laws and these proceedings will make it. Pass this bill! While warning off the National Government from all interference or control over its own elections, you voted down on the other bill a proposition that armed men should not come to the polls. You voted down on the other bill a proposition that armed men should not come to the polls with the expressed intent of interfering with the rights of voters, and you did it under the paltry quibble that it was not within the constitutional power of the United States Government to warn bloody-handed ruffians from the polls, where the Representatives in the Federal Congress were being chosen. Pass this bill! Pass it as the triumph of the reactionary party against the spirit of the Union! Pass it in defiance of all the lessons and all the teachings that have come from a bloody and abortive rebellion! Pass it, and mark it as a high tide of that reaction which, were it to rise higher, could lead only to another and formidable rebellion against the legitimate authority of the Union!

HON. ZACH. CHANDLER SPEAKS.

Mr. CHANDLER, of Michigan, said: History is repeating itself to-day. There is a proverbial saying that the Bourbons never learn anything and never forget anything. The proverb is very applicable to the Bourbons of this country. In 1857, he said, the Bourbons had control of this Government. You had a majority in both Houses, a majority in the Supreme Court, and the whole of this Government was under your control. You brought up the repeal of the Missouri compromise and forced your Northern men then, as you are doing now, to vote for that repeal and you did it by the same means. Then, Sir, you crowded your men till you crowded them off the bridge. In 1857, when I took my seat in this body with Jeff. Davis [laughter] there were 44 Democrats, 20 Republicans, and two Independents in this body. To-day there are Democrats, 28 were from the Southern States, 16 from the Northern States, and two Independent. Then, as now, the Independents in this body, upon every question connected with slavery, voted with the South. You, in caucus, then decreed that Stephen A. Douglas, because he asserted that he did not care whether slavery was voted up or down, should be degraded from the Chairmanship of the Committee on Territories, and there were but three Northern men out of the 16 who dared to resist caucus dictation. And you did degrade him and put him off that committee. Then you crowded your men off the bridge, and they sank to a man into the waters of oblivion to rise no more forever. Sir, of those 16 members, not a solitary man from the North ever came up to the surface of the waters of oblivion. You crowded them off the bridge; you compelled them to vote for measures which the North could not, and would not, withstand. Sir, to-day you are doing the selfsame thing. To-day we have in this body 41 Democrats, 30 Republicans, and 1 Independent. To-day, as 22 years ago, on all questions connected with State rights, the Independent Party as a unit votes with the Democratic Party. To-day you have, as I said, 42 members in this body—41 leaving out the Independent part. You have 12 members from the North, and they are arranged thus: From California, one; from Indiana, now as then, two; from New-Jersey two, now as then; from Ohio you have two, you had but one then; from Oregon you have two now, and you had two then; from Pennsylvania you have one now, you had one then; from Rhode Island you have none now, but you have one from Connecticut and one from New-York.

As I said, history is to-day repeating itself, and you are to-day repeating what you did in 1857—you are crowding your men off the bridge. And the men of to-day, as the men of 1857, will sink into the waters of oblivion to rise no more forever. Look at the change that has taken place since that time. Sir, the people are more thoroughly aroused to-day against this doctrine—this heresy of State rights—than they were from 1857 to 1861. You proposed to pension Jefferson Davis, and every single one of your Northern allies voted to pension him. You eulogized him as a patriot to be compared side by side with Washington and all the patriots of the Revolution, and every one of your Northern allies voted yea. After the close of the rebellion you claimed that you were poor and suffering, and we found you poor and suffering; we found you ragged and poor, and we clothed you; we put upon you the robe of American citizenship, which you had forfeited, and we killed for you the fatted calf and invited you to the feast, supposing that you, after being clothed, were in your right mind. And when we invited you to the feast you said: "We have always owned that calf and you have no interest in it." [Laughter.] Now you inform us that you are going to repeal all the Republican measures. What is the job you have undertaken? You are going to undo all that the Republican Party has done. Where do you begin? Do you begin at Appomattox or before? It is very important to know where you commence, and then to know where you propose to stop. You have undertaken a very large job for a party of your size, and with the people who are to sit as judges upon your acts. You have undertaken to unseat a man in this body. But you will deny that you have undertaken the job—you have simply undertaken to investigate the case of a Senator on this floor that has been decided by the highest tribunal that could act on that question. Sir, there are 12 Senators on that side of the house that every man on this side believes have poorer titles to their seats than the Honorable Senator from Louisiana has to his. By fraud and violence you occupy your seats; now, show us the road to vacate seats in this body, if you dare!

Mr. BAYARD, of Connecticut—I call the Senator to order.

Mr. CHANDLER—Very well, Sir; I will take your point of order.

Mr. BAYARD—My point is, that the Senator from Michigan is entirely out of order when he says that 12 Senators on this floor hold their seats by fraud and violence.

Mr. CHANDLER—I did not say that. I said they hold their seats by a poorer title.

Mr. BAYARD—You said fraud and violence.

Mr. CHANDLER—I said we believe it, and so I do believe, and so I have a right to believe.

Mr. GARLAND, of Arkansas, asked that the exact words be taken down.

The official reporter read the words as taken down by him and as given above.

Mr. BECK, of Kentucky, called upon Mr. Chandler to name the seat who held their seats by fraud and violence.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, hoped the question would be overruled.

Mr. BAYARD said the remarks of the Senator from Michigan were insultingly out of order, and called for a ruling by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. overruled the point of order.

There being considerable confusion in the chamber, Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, asked for the enforcement of order, both in the Senate and in the gallery.

Order being restored, Mr. CHANDLER resumed as follows: I think every Senator on this side of the chamber believes that there are 12 Senators on the other side who hold their titles to their seats upon a slimsy, poorer basis than my honored friend from Louisiana. That is what I intended to state—that it was our belief, and it is my belief, that their seats were obtained and are held by fraud and violence. That is what I now say. But, Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss this question. I simply rose to say to the other side, you have your day in court, make the most of it. Your time is short. The people of the North have taken this question in hand, and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from one end of this land to the other, the people are aroused and alarmed at the statements that have been made, and the action that has been taken, in this Senate Chamber and in the other House within the last 60 days. Let me say to you, gentlemen on the other side of the chamber, mene, mene, tekel, upharsin is written all over your brows, [applause in the galleries, which was promptly checked by the Chair.]

THE BILL PASSED.

The bill to prohibit military interference at elections was then passed in the precise form in which it came from the House—yeas 33, nays 23, as follows, [Republicans in Roman, Democrats in italics:]

THE LEGISLATIVE BILL.

On motion of Mr. BECK, the Senate took up the House bill making appropriations for the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Departments of the Government, and then, at 4:45 o'clock, adjourned until to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

REMOVING POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

Immediately after the reading of the Journal, the SPEAKER proceeded to call committees for reports of a private nature. Among the bills reported was one removing the political disabilities of J. C. Pemberton, of Philadelphia.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, called attention to the fact that this was the first time a citizen of the loyal City of Philadelphia had had occasion to ask pardon for the part which he had taken in the rebellion.

Mr. COX, of New-York, thought that the Judiciary Committee should report something besides individual disability bills. Fourteen years after the war Congress was discussing private amnesty bills. Why not make a general amnesty bill, even though it included every man who had taken part in the rebellion? Why not wipe out the test oath, which those only who had been loyal had to take? What a farce was all this business since the so-called rebellion.

Shouts of "so-called" on the Republican side.

Mr. COX—So called by you, gentlemen, and so called by me. Continuing, he said that there was no nation on the face of the earth which would not have granted grace and amnesty long ago. To hear gentlemen on the other side of the House laughing, one would suppose that they were sorry their arms had conquered the rebellion. He hoped the Judiciary Committee would report a general bill.

Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, said that it was not the first time the gentleman from New-York [Mr. Cox] had seemed to indicate his regret that he had been able to take the test oath while others of his colleagues could not. [Laughter.] There was no compulsion about taking the test oath. The gentleman might possibly take the other.

Mr. COX—I do not quite understand what my sweet friend from Michigan means. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER—The gentleman says that there is imposed upon him the necessity of taking the test oath; that he has been true and loyal. He has expressed a kind of regret that it should be so, not only to-day, but upon former occasions. He may take the other oath if this one offends him so much.

Mr. COX said that the sweet singer of Michigan [laughter] was very harshly judged. It was the general suspicion that when that General took his breakfast he drank about a quart of lemon-juice. He [Mr. Cox] knew that there was sugar in the gentleman's nature. The gentleman was not a political Zulu, who dipped his spear-head in poison. He always dipped his spear in molasses, and was kind and gentle. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER replied that the gentleman from New-York need not have soothed his feelings with so much pleasantry and sweetness and sugar and molasses and lemon-juice. That gentleman seemed to be familiar with the kind of juice he [Mr. Conger] took with his meats. He did not know the particular kind of juice the gentleman used. It might be the juice drawn from the broad fields of the West. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOTT, of Kentucky, put an end to the discussion by demanding the previous question, and the bill was passed.

THE SILVER BILL.

The House resumed consideration of the Warner Silver bill, and was addressed by Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, in advocacy of the bill, and in favor of a double standard. He argued that the bill demonetizing silver was unconstitutional. If Congress had the constitutional power to stop the coinage of silver, it also had the power to stop the coinage of gold, and that would be another way of starving the Government to death. He did not want worthless money. He wanted cheap money and dear property. Now, money was dear and property cheap, so that money was master and king, and property went begging at a discount. He characterized the demonetization of silver as a great international conspiracy of men who had fixed incomes, as against, and in opposition to, those who own the great bulk of property in the world. He also criticized the act of 1869 to strengthen public credit.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, inquired if Mr. Weaver had not voted, in 1868, for Gen. Grant.

Mr. WEAVER replied that he had.

Mr. MITCHELL then inquired if the act of 1869 had not been based upon the platform upon which Gen. Grant had been elected.

Mr. WEAVER replied that he did not so understand it. He acknowledged that he had been then in the same situation that a great many of his friends were now, and knew nothing about this financial question. But he had received new light, and believed the act of 1869 to be a great public wrong. It amounted to little less than a robbery of the people. Gen. Grant and the Republican Party to the contrary notwithstanding. He proceeded to speak in opposition to the national banking system.

Messrs. CONGER of Michigan, WILSON of New-York, FINNEY of Pennsylvania, and other Republican members, interposed a number of questions which called forth the remark from Mr. WEAVER that, though he was willing to answer them one by one, he did not want the whole syndicate at him at once. [Laughter.] Mr. Weaver continued his argument against the national bank system, which he said was a monstrosity in the history of legislation. He then passed on to a consideration of the Resumption act, which he characterized as another step in that trinity of infamies that had been fastened on the American people. Passing on to the Silver Remonetization act passed a year or two ago, he said that a conspiracy had been entered into by the New-York Clearing-house that silver should not be received unless it was to be paid back in kind. That had been done after a certain man, who was now traveling abroad, [alluding to Gen. Grant,] had written a letter from Smyrna advising the business men of the country, in case of the passage of the Bland Silver bill, to combine to defeat its operation. There had been a great deal of talk in this House about "revolution," but as an ex-soldier who had fought under that man Grant, he must say that that advice to the American people to resist a constitutionally passed law by combining to defeat it, was indeed a revolution, and treason of the highest order. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not only that, but the Secretary of the Treasury had struck hands with Wall-street and Lombard-street, and said that he would not pay out silver. He [Mr. Weaver] would offer as the proper time an amendment directing the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be paid out, without discrimination, the standard silver coin the same as gold coin in liquidation of the coin obligation of the Government. He denied that the Greenback Party was an inflation party. It was in favor of gold, silver, and legal-tender paper money, all issued by the Government, (not by banking associations,) and all of full legal-tender qualities. It was not in favor of any wild scheme. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. De La MATYR] had introduced a bill, but had disclaimed that it was his bill or that he introduced it, and yet not an indecent allusion which a man dare use on this floor had been omitted about that gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor, and the House, at 4:15 o'clock, adjourned.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS DISCUSSED.

THE POLITICAL OUTLOOK IN LOUISIANA—GRANT'S CHANCES IN THE STATE—DEMOCRATIC INDIFFERENCE TOWARD WILDEN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

IN THE NEW-YORK TIMES of April 10 I find a carefully-prepared and very complete résumé of the prevailing feeling in regard to the probable candidates of the two great political parties in the approaching Presidential campaign. Your conclusion, drawn from intelligent and unbiased correspondents all over the country, is that Grant will undoubtedly be the candidate of the Republican Party, and that indications point to the renomination of Tilden by the Democrats. In this you are undoubtedly correct, and your masterly presentation of the subject will go far toward enabling the masses to shape their political steps understandingly.

What I desire to point out, however, in this communication is an unintentional error into which your New-Orleans correspondent of the above date has fallen. He is correct when he defines Louisiana Democracy as a heterogeneous combination of all those discordant elements that are opposed to Federal military interference, or, indeed, to Federal influence in any shape, and that it was for the common hatred of the Yankee it would be an impotent party, and too insignificant to promulgate a platform. But your correspondent errs when he says that Republicans here generally consider their election of an Elector in 1880 an impossibility, and that the negro exodus has destroyed their numerical superiority.

The fact is that the Republicans look upon the nomination of Tilden by the Democrats as a foregone conclusion, and they are so well aware of the dispiriting and unnerving influence this nomination would have upon the rank and file of the so-called Democracy—they are so well aware of the utter lack of enthusiasm evinced at the mention of his name in connection with the Presidency all over the State, that, instead of despairing, they feel confident that if Grant is the Republican nominee they will be able to carry the eight Electors that the State is entitled to for him. You can have no idea of the utter indifference, or even distaste, with which Tilden is regarded by the Democrats of Louisiana. Thousands upon thousands of straight-laced Bourbons would vote for Grant in preference to him. The ex-Confederate element, which is quite strong in New-Orleans, is especially pronounced in this matter—they prefer Grant to Tilden. This preference is so well understood that a lately published address of the Grant Campaign Committee to the voters of the State lays particular stress upon it. The soldiers of the late Confederacy bear no ill-will to Grant; they respect him and rather like him, as brave men always do like other brave men by whom they are overcome in honest warfare. I have sounded numbers of leading ex-Confederates on the subject, and the unvarying reply has been: "If Hancock is nominated by us, we will vote for him; but if our convention nominates another professional politician, we'll go for Grant. We have had enough of politicians."

My deliberate opinion, arrived at after a careful survey of the field, is that even after losing a few thousand negro votes by the present exodus, the gain of dissatisfied Democratic votes will be so great at the next Presidential election that the Republican Party will find no difficulty in carrying the State for Grant by a little more than the ordinary majority that an impartial census would clearly entitle her to.

There is a slight preponderance of colored voters over whites in the State, say about 5,000; and, besides, there are from 8,000 to 10,000 white Republicans in New-Orleans alone. Add to this a few thousand ex-Confederate soldiers and a number of cool, practical business men in the cities and towns of the State who would prefer Grant to Tilden, and there is no doubt about the result—provided, always, that the negroes do not entirely desert us. Heretofore they have done so to a considerable extent, but whether they will do it next year depends a good deal upon who is United States Marshal for Louisiana. F. HEIDEHOFF.

THE GOODYEAR COMPANY'S PATENT.

AN EXPLANATION IN BEHALF OF THE DENTISTS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The statements made in your paper of 4th inst. in the article signed "Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Company, by E. Ernst Cadus, Secretary," and also those made by "M. D." in your issue of April 30, are so incorrect and so unfair that I send you page 169 of the "Contemporary Biography of New-York," and I ask you, in simple justice to the dental profession in this country, to publish the portion relating to Dr. Thomas Bryan Gunning's legal contest with, and complete defeat of, Josiah Bacon and his employers. J. A. B.

"The World's Fair, held in London in 1851, contained several exhibits of artificial teeth set on plastic bases or plates, but nothing approaching to the hard rubber, for which an American patent was granted to Nelson Goodyear, in the year before the Exhibition. His partner Charles obtained his first idea of applying it to artificial teeth while in Europe to attend the fair, and experiments were subsequently made to adapt it for use in the mouth, but it was not until 1857, and then of little importance for two or three years later. In 1861 Dr. Gunning purchased the right to use the Goodyear patents, brought out their extensions, and claimed that the patents had less than a year to run, but a new patent for the application of the rubber to artificial teeth was obtained on the ground that one John A. Cummings had perfected the process in 1855. This patent, having a 17-year term, extended the monopoly from 14 years to 30, that is, to 1861, and to enforce this, the Goodyear patents being extended seven years, a license was given to the holders of patents, and to that the Goodyear patents sustained the Cummings. This was resisted by many who admitted the validity of the Goodyear patents, but quite were brought, and the Cummings patent sustained by the United States Circuit Court in Boston, in 1866. As Dr. Gunning would not be made an example of submission to what he deemed an illegal claim, several bills in equity were filed against him, but the company rested on the decision referred to. After the Autumn of 1871 the case known as the "Gardner appeal" was presented to the dentists, who rallied to its support, as urgently advised by leading members of the profession. In the United States Supreme Court decided adversely to the dentists, and affirmed the Cummings patent on May 5, 1872, the day the Goodyear patents expired. The company then commenced another bill against Dr. Gunning, who, finding that his patent counsel had accepted a retainer from his opponents and could not appear for him, instructed his attorney to do so instead. Thereupon a motion was made to have the Gardner case recalled, and he offered to break the Cummings patent if the American Dental Association would cooperate with him. As this offer was not accepted, it was thought best by some gentlemen to bring the company to a fair fight on the merits of the case. Dr. Gunning, therefore, decided to force the company to a settlement with himself. The result was, that rather than take the answer which they had dictated filed, they acknowledged his right to do as he had done, and stipulated that he should use all the improvements claimed under their patents without molestation in the future. This bill was dismissed by Judge Woodruff Oct. 18, 1872, the company paying the taxed costs. Dr. Gunning had warned the dentists against the Gardner appeal case. Now, although his personal interest in the matter was at an end, he still earnestly desired to relieve them from unjust exaction. Having submitted the matter to Charles O'Conor, Dr. Gunning sought Judge Black and gave him full control of the matter, together with Mr. O'Conor's written views. Judge Black then determined to make the motion before the Supreme Court, and it being shown that the case had been settled by both sides of the Gardner suit, and that the complainant, on March 3, 1873, the court dismissed that case and recalled its mandate, although it had issued to the Circuit Court. This is the last time that any case from the Circuit Court of the United States ever revoked its decision. By this revocation the dentists were again at liberty to contest the Cummings patent."

INSOLVENT INSURANCE COMPANIES.

DEATH CLAIMS ENTITLED TO PRIORITY OF PAYMENT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Reading your admirable editorial in Saturday's issue as to the distribution of the estates of insolvent life insurance companies, I think the following quotations from high authorities may be instructive:

Chancellor Runyon, in holding that death-claims were entitled to preference, under the charter of the New-Jersey Mutual, whereby the amount due on premium notes was declared to be a fund subject to call for the payment of debts, says:

"The case of the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company (11 Hun., 96,) is cited as an adverse decision. The court, indeed, there held that a death-claim due before the insolvency was not entitled to preference in payment over the claims for return of premiums, but the distribution was under the New-York statute, and the court took pains to establish the position that the company was not a mutual one, although it provided for participation by policy-holders in the profits of its business."

The Attorney-General, in his opinion accompanying the proposed bill urging priority of payment for death-claims, says:

"The justice of this rule may be questioned by many, but the reasons for it are well stated in a recent opinion of the Chancellor of New-Jersey in ordering distribution of the assets of the New-Jersey Life Insurance Company. The reason for legislation on the subject is found in the fact that some of the courts of this State have ruled that such claims are not entitled to preference. (11 Hun., 96. Opinion of Judge Learned in the matter of the New-York State Life. These decisions appear to be founded on the absence of a statute giving such a preference."

It will be seen that Chancellor Runyon declines to follow the case in 11 Hun., 96—first, because the distribution is under the New-York statute; secondly, because the Security Life Company was not a mutual company; thirdly, because the charter of the New-Jersey Mutual, under which those contracts were made, fixed the relative rights of death-claims (or debts) and the equitable claim of earnest policy-holders for the return of the unearned portion of premiums paid. It is evident, also, that the Attorney-General misconceives the extent of this decision, and appears to be desirous to postpone of equity jurisprudence instead of a mere construction of a particular contract, (charter of the New-Jersey Mutual,) and that he admits that the statute of New-York does not now give a preference to death-claims. My third and last quotation is from the recent opinion of Chancellor O'Donoghue on the Tennessee Railway bonds, page 106:

"Recently my predecessor, has been constrained so frequently and by such possible interpretations of our highest judicial tribunal, on that the law of a State at the time a Fourteenth is made entire into the contract and forms part of it, in such manner that the obligation of the contract as thus interpreted cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation. It would hardly be decorous to occupy attention by citing authorities to this point. (8 Wallace, U. S. R., 64.)"

In the bill of the Attorney-General, the relative rights not only of all parties to existing contracts is proposed to be altered, in this subject was by subsequent legislation, but the third section proposes to apply this act to "the distribution of assets of insolvent life insurance companies at the time of its passage;" that is, by legislation to alter the rights of parties in funds seized by the court for distribution to those to whom they of right belonged at the time of seizure. The absolute injustice and unconstitutionality of such legislation is so manifest, that "it would hardly be decorous to occupy attention by citing authorities to this point."

THE INVINCIBLE GUARD.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of to-day, on the second page, you publish an extract from the London Telegraph, which appeared in that paper over the suggestive initials "D. B." It is certain that up to the time of the Crimean war it was generally believed by Frenchmen that the words "La Garde meurt et ne se rend pas" were used at Waterloo either by Cambronne or some one else, and this belief was the occasion of a clever caricature, "The Guard" was, it is true, at the close of Sebastopol exempt from fatigue duty, and officers and soldiers were having a "soft thing," comparatively, all the rest of the French Army taking their turn at the dishes. "La Garde," however, found chalked up one morning at their quarters in very terrible characters the following parody on their old legend: "La Garde dessouse (ed.) et ne se rend pas! (sauce tremblée.)"

BEAUTIES WON BY TITLES.

THE WIFE OF PRINCE LUCIEN MURAT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I read in THE TIMES of last Monday a long and interesting article copied from the Cincinnati Gazette concerning American girls who have wedded distinguished foreigners. The marriage of Miss Frazer to Prince Lucien Murat is, however, mentioned much briefer than the subject deserves.

Miss Frazer was a Philadelphia lady of Scotch extraction. She was one of the many links between the United States and the imperial court of France, where she was allowed to rank as the wife of a prince of the blood. She made a love match. The year she exchanged the name of Frazer for that of Murat the fortunes of the Bonaparte family were at a low ebb; Caroline, the widow of King Joachim, the youngest sister of Napoleon, and the mother-in-law of Miss Frazer, was dying in poverty in Trieste; Louis Napoleon was a moaning adventurer, in debt and difficulties, and dependent for nerve and sustenance on the beautiful Mrs. Gordon, whom at Ham he charged Louis Blanc to kiss for him; Charlotte, the widow of Louis Charles, eldest son of the King of Holland and Queen Hortense, and the daughter of Joseph Bonaparte, was following her scandalous downhill career in the Eternal City. She had been the Delilah of Leopold Robert, the painter, who died in a paroxysm of jealousy which she excited. The Pope contemplated banishing her from the States of the Church. Miss Bonaparte Wyse was the paramour of an Irish officer, Capt. Johnstone, in a garret in the Rue de Rivoli, along with her two daughters. Lucien's sons, Pierre and Antoine, were filibusters with no fixed home, and held in contempt by the family. Pierre was the bright spot in the darkened sky was the marriage, at Florence, of Jerome Napoleon's daughter, Mathilde, to Prince Demidoff. Mathilde, then a young woman of superb beauty and brilliant accomplishments, came with her wealthy Russian husband to Paris to agitate for her family, and to repeal a Bonaparte statute, to which M. Thiers promised to bring his friends.

While she was shining in Parisian society, and as a subject of Czar Nicholas, and a cousin of his son-in-law, defying the Police of Louis Philippe, Lucien Murat was trying to eke out a subsistence for himself and his young wife by teaching French to American Quakers. Mrs. Murat was an estimable, but not loveable woman. The Scot is the most respectable but the least amiable member of the Celtic family, and there was much of Scotland in the mental complexion and the instincts of this prince of the blood that was to be. She was thrown with the prose of the Quakers among whom she lived. The Caledonian redness had faded into drab in "the City of Brotherly Love." She was very prim and reserved, and a sharper woman about money never lived. The capacity of the Munich faculty, of which, after Prince Mathilde's death, (he later married an American girl,) she was the head, pressed severely on the lazy Princess. Lucien and his wife profited by the favor which their daughter Anna enjoyed at the Palace to make money and enrich themselves and their children, one of whom had married a Mr. Garden.

It is to the honor of the Princess that she never abandoned the religious principles of her youth when stupid Spanish superstition, which was incarnate in the Empress, reigned at the Tuileries. The Spanish Princess brought her children up to believe in a rational form of Christianity, but was not able to induce her sons to practice it. They are and scamps, with the vices of the different countries by which they are connected by blood and education, and few of the virtues. One of them having outrun the Sheriff in France, has come to live on his wife's relatives in Marseilles. Another serves as a soldier in Algeria. Their mother lived in communion with the Reformed Church of France up to the eve of her decease. It was then decided that it would be of political utility to transfer her to the Roman fold, in order to enable the Government to make a show of a mass, attended by Bonapartists, celebrated for her soul's repose. Anna, her youngest daughter, and, at the present time, Duchess de Mouchy, to disarm the jealousy of the Empress Eugenie, embraced the Catholic religion. As a neophyte she was instructed by the ill-starred Abbé Dupanloup, who at that time catechised the Prince Imperial, and prepared him for the first Communion.

The American Princess and her sister, Miss Frazer, resided together after the breakdown of the empire. Their lodgings were near the town house of Boulogne. Do Hell, the Prince's aide, who had overhauled the butler's and cook's accounts, looked after the nurses and the governess, and saw that the chef applied his skill in the interests of economy.

A FEW CORRECTIONS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you allow me, as a historian and genealogist, to correct some errors which appeared in the article entitled "Beauties Won by Titles," published in THE TIMES of Monday last, (5th inst.) In the first place, the paragraph relating to the Marquess D'Frujo, is somewhat ambiguous. The correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette calls the lady's father, Thomas McKean, "the then Chief-Justice." If the writer means that Thomas McKean was Chief-Justice of the United States, it is an error, as he never held that office. LOOKING TO CONFIRMATION

THE MAYOR'S NOMINATIONS.

YESTERDAY'S ACTION OF THE ALDERMEN—VIEWS OF A LEADING POLITICIAN—PROBABLE CONFIRMATION OF THE NOMINEES.

The action of the Board of Aldermen in laying over the nominations yesterday was significant. Some of the Aldermen who had declared their fixed purpose to vote against the list had evidently reconsidered the matter, and were willing to wait a little; while others who had not committed themselves that way were also desirous to have more time to consider the situation. There were not a few persons present in the Aldermanic Board, or in its vicinity, who declared as soon as the adjournment was had that it gave sure promise of the final confirmation of the nominations. It is very likely that events will prove these omens. A prominent Republican stated yesterday that though the Republican Party had not been given all they were justly entitled to, yet they had all that could be obtained, and they had not decided to accept what was offered them until every expedient had been exhausted to get more. Mr. French had been named as a sort of compromise candidate; and it was useless now to talk about substituting the name of any of the other of the numerous candidates suggested for the office. They had been presented, and had been rejected, one and all. It was by a sort of happy accident that Mr. French had been thought of, and his acceptance had removed a dead lock between the Mayor and the Republican leaders which threatened to be permanent, or at least to cause serious trouble. That he will be confirmed, when the whole circumstances become known to the Aldermen, there was very little doubt. It would probably be found when the Board of Aldermen met next Tuesday, that the six Republican Aldermen were united, and would vote for confirmation solidly. Among the seven Anti-Tammany members there were only two who had declared themselves unwilling to vote for confirmation; but they would probably recognize the fact that they cannot possibly gain the object they desire by preventing confirmation. So long as the new nominees are kept out of office, the present incumbents remain in. If those who are standing out among the Anti-Tammany members should insist on maintaining their attitude of opposition, with the Republicans acting as a unit, things can be arranged in such a way as to leave them in a minority of two. It was thought that when the whole situation had been thoroughly looked over by the Aldermen, they would see that the best thing to be done was to vote for confirmation.

MEETING OF THE ALDERMEN.

NO ACTION TAKEN ON THE NOMINATIONS—THE PERSONS NAMED FOR MARSHALS.

The Republican and Anti-Tammany Aldermen appeared at an unusually early hour yesterday morning in the City Hall, preparatory to deciding what course should be adopted in regard to Mayor Cooper's nominations for various offices. It was known that the fate of all candidates would depend upon whatever action might be taken on the case of Mr. Stephen B. French, the nominee for Police Commissioner, whose name stood at the head of the list, and this fact of itself invested the proceedings with much interest. Shortly before 11 o'clock some of the Anti-Tammany and Republican Aldermen held an informal conference as to what should be done with the names. The former were willing to confirm two or three of the Democratic candidates, but they objected to Mr. French on the plea that at least two of the Republican members were opposed to him, and that he could not be accepted. Aldermen Burns and Morris, however, declared that action should be taken on Mr. French's nomination before anything else was done. Another remarked that he was not willing to have Mr. French "slaughtered," and that so long as he was in the field he should vote for him. He would not vote for any of the Democratic nominees until his Anti-Tammany colleagues supported Mr. French. It was finally determined not to take any action on the nominations at the meeting.

The board met promptly at noon. Mayor Cooper was unofficially represented by several friends, and they watched the proceedings closely. Among those in attendance were John J. O'Brien, Major Bullard, ex-Alderman Cole, Solomon Smith, ex-Alderman Sachs, William S. Andrews, and others. Alderman Stueck was called to the chair. In accordance with a previous agreement, the regular business of the board was proceeded with, and no reference was ever made to the nominations.

Alderman Morris was the first to present a paper. He submitted a resolution earnestly requesting the State Legislature "not to pass any bill for the extension of the tracks of any railroad now established, or hereafter to be established, or to refuse to be established in this City, unless a clause be contained therein that the franchise shall be sold at public auction to the highest responsible bidder, after proper notice of sale." The resolution then protests in the name of the Common Council of the City "against the extension of the tracks or laying of tracks by newly-organized companies, unless such provision is contained in every such grant."

Mr. Morris's resolutions created some debate. Alderman Sauer wanted them referred to the Commissioner of Railroads, but Mr. Morris opposed the motion. In the course of his remarks on the subject, the author of the measure referred to the bill now before the State Legislature on the subject of the Broadway Railroad, and said the Aldermen should protest at once, before it was too late. The City would get comparatively nothing if the bill before the Legislature became a law.

This last remark aroused Alderman Burns, who said: "Does any one suppose that this body of statesmen would give anything away without getting paid for it?"

Much laughter greeted Mr. Burns's remark, after which the motion to refer was put and carried by the following vote:

Affirmative—Aldermen Burns, Carroll, Cavanagh, George Hall, Robert Hall, Haughton, Hyatt, Keenan, Kenney, Kiernan, Sauer, Sheils, Stewart, and Stueck—14.

Negative—Aldermen Finck, Jacobus, Morris, Purley, and Roberts—5.

A communication was received from Mayor Cooper nominating the following persons for City Marshals:

John H. Whitmore, in place of Marvin R. Clarke; Patrick Meyenhan, in place of Mathew T. Burns; Meyer Goodman, in place of Meyer Goodman; Albert Bender, in place of Isaac O. Goldstein; Frederick Stahl, in place of John Duggan, Jr.; William Miller, in place of William Alt; Peter W. Salmon, in place of Peter W. Salmon; John Costello, in place of Louis Leubenscher; Hugh F. Farrell, in place of Abraham Bernard; William Grote, in place of John Frank; Frederick Salb, in place of George Hatzel; Judson G. Wells, in place of John Sheridan; William J. Boyhan, in place of John McDonough; Daniel J. Sullivan, in place of George Bonsein; George J. Smith, in place of George J. Smith; Charles W. Babcock, in place of John R. McCarthy; John K. Grimes, in place of James McCarthy; John Sullivan, in place of Patrick Fenny; Edward Mullery, in place of John C. Lyst; Denis Galvin, in place of Lewis McDermott; J. Russell Sloat, in place of Thomas Cunningham; Jacob Knobloch, in place of Joseph M. Hill; Nicholas Beaner, in place of Louis Levy; Frank Keck; John C. Grimes, in place of Frank O'Donnell; Sylvester Bennett, in place of Mathew Nugent; Daniel McGowan, in place of Lawrence Delmore; Thomas H. Sullivan, in place of Daniel O'Brien; Joseph P. Kennedy, in place of Joseph P. Kennedy; James King, in place of Thomas Corcoran; James B. Smith, in place of Thomas McGrath; Patrick H. Stewart, in place of Richard C. Walsh; Augustus Bacon, in place of Patrick J. Mahoney; Richard M. Lush, in place of Richard M. Lush; William A. Shields, in place of Denis Galvin; Michael Goode, in place of Cornelius Farley.

All these names were referred to the Committee on Salaries and Offices without debate. When this disposition had been made of the list, Alderman Purley moved that the board do now adjourn. Almost instinctively every member rose to leave his seat. The motion was put, and carried unanimously, and in five minutes the chamber was empty.

The Aldermen subsequently went to their committee-room and remained there for about an hour, during which they failed to come to any agreement on the nominations. It was ascertained from one of them that of the 35 names sent in for City Marshals, the Anti-Tammany and Republican Aldermen had selected 26 and the Mayor 9.

It was also said that the Mayor had rejected one of the Aldermen's candidates for City Marshal because charges had been made by a certain Assemblyman against him, and that there was at present a breach between the Aldermen and the Mayor. But, notwithstanding the present attitude of the Aldermen on the Mayor's nominations, shrewd politicians assert that all of them will probably be confirmed.

THE GERMANS DISAPPOINTED.

MAYOR COOPER MILDLY REPROVED—TILDEN THE CAUSE OF THE TROUBLE.

The Central Committee of the German American Independent Citizens' Association met last evening at Beethoven Hall, Justice Osterhoung in the chair. C. J. Nehrbas, on the part of the Executive Committee, presented a set of resolutions criticising the conduct of Mayor Cooper. They state that the ticket headed by Edward Cooper was supported and elected by the people in the hope, and on the promises made by him, that the City Government should be conducted honestly and economically; that his administration had thus far been marked by actions of a "Hancock-like character," but the administration, still having faith in his good intentions, considers it their duty to give expression to their views, with the hope of "driving him as emphatically of changing his policy, which, if persisted in, must lead to disastrous consequences." They further state that the indication and vacillation evinced by the Mayor in the face of his duty to appoint performance of his failure in preferring charges against one of the Commissioners of the board against which, as a whole, accusations of incompetence and dereliction of duty had been advanced, and the trading of public offices in the face of the community are sinking the City Government to the lowest level. In the opinion of the association the administration of the Mayor means be a failure if he persists in leading the influence of his position to the promotion of the interests of one or the other of the political parties and permit the Municipal Government "to become the foot-ball of scheming politicians."

Germer Ellinger, in seconding the resolutions, said that since the last election it was discovered that Mr. Cooper was not the real Mayor. There was another man who controlled the Mayoralty, and that man was trying by every possible means to secure a renomination to the Presidency. This man, Samuel J. Tilden, whom the Germans regarded as an honest and honorable statesman, and whom they had helped to elect, was now seeking to gain political power and to further his own interests by mean political machinations. Shall the German Independents give any further support to such a man? (Cries of "No!") No; the Germans would not be made tools of by a man who sought only to advance his own interests.

Speeches were also made by S. D. Sewards, Dr. Schulze, Dr. Gerke, Mr. Kuster, and others, in which Tilden was bitterly denounced, and compared to a losing gambler, who, in despair, was gambling away money to retrieve his losses. Justice Osterhoung, the last speaker, confined himself to criticising the Mayor's conduct. If the Germans, said he, have no right to complain for being overlooked in the distribution of patronage, they have a right to complain that the expectations of the citizens for reform have not been realized. Had Mayor Cooper selected his candidates from the proper elements, the public would have condemned the Aldermen for refusing to confirm them. He hesitated for four months, taking foul counsel, and selecting candidates not in the interests of the City. If Mayor Cooper continues to deny reform in the administration the Germans would oppose him as persistently as they had fought for him. The resolutions were then unanimously adopted.

INTERCOLLEGIATE ATHLETICS.

NEW-YORK BOYS HOLDING THEIR OWN—THE BEST HAMMER-THROW.

The fourth field meeting of the Intercollegiate Athletic Association was held on the grounds of the New-York Athletic Club, at Mott Haven, yesterday afternoon. The grand stand was filled with gayly-attired ladies, and all the available seats about the grounds were occupied. The association is composed of 19 colleges, nine of which were represented yesterday. The strongest delegations, in number, were from Columbia, the College of the City of New-York; Princeton, and the University of Pennsylvania, a large number of friends of the contestants having come up from Philadelphia and Princeton on the morning trains. Mr. T. W. White was referee, and the judges were Messrs. Lafon, Goldie, Morse, and Curtis. The first contest was a 100-yard dash, in three trial heats. This was closely contested among Butgers, Lehigh, Stevens, the University of Pennsylvania, Harvard, and City of New-York Colleges. In the first heat, H. H. Lee, one of the crack runners of the University of Pennsylvania, was the winner; L. A. Stewart, of the College of the City of New-York, took the second, and F. Loney, a Sophomore from Princeton, the third. The one-mile walk was just a little dull, on top of all the walking New-Yorkers have seen lately. Very fair time was made, however, E. H. Sayre, a Columbia Sophomore, coming in first in 7:04; L. O. Emerich, of Lehigh, second, in 7:56. Mr. Emerich handles his walking attachments very nicely, but they are a trifle short. The standing high jump was not one of the most interesting exercises of the afternoon, but some good jumping was done. There were eight entries. F. Larkin, of Princeton, winning with 4 feet 6¾ inches; H. H. Lee, of Columbia, second, 4 feet 5 inches. The two trial heats of the 440-yards dash were merged into one, a number of the contestants having withdrawn, and the consolidated heat was won by C. H. Cogswell, of Dartmouth, in 0:54; J. H. Simmons, of Harvard, second in 0:55. In the graduate mile walk, everybody having withdrawn but E. J. McIlvaine, of the University of Pennsylvania, that gentleman walked over the track in 8:51¾. The running high jump was an entertaining performance, without, however, the facility for sore noses offered by the hurdle-race. There were seven contestants, nearly all good jumpers, but none quite so good as J. P. Conover, of Columbia, who jumped 5 feet 3¼ inches; G. L. Heins, of the University of Pennsylvania, was second, jumping 5 feet 7½ inches. The first trial heat of the 220-yard dash was a walk over for Senior Lee, of the University of Pennsylvania. The second heat was taken by E. J. Wendell, of Harvard, and the third heat was not run.

Throwing the hammer 16 pounds, was warm work for a warm afternoon like yesterday, but representatives of Rutgers, Princeton, and Columbia Colleges, two from each, competed. The best throw on record, 91 feet, 2 inches, was made by F. Larkin, of Princeton, splendidly formed young collegian, who recorded 87 feet, 1 inch. Second place was taken by E. W. Blackwell, of Princeton, who threw 91 feet, 1 inch. There were only two competitors in the 100-yards dash for graduates, and Mr. Waller, of Columbia, was the winner. Time—0:11 1-5. The half-mile run, with 10 entries, was one of the most exciting events of the afternoon. White, of the University of Pennsylvania, was the favorite at the start, but C. H. Cogswell, of Dartmouth, passed him and won the race in 2:12. The hurdle race presented excellent opportunities for trips and ugly falls, but there were no accidents. The first trial heat was won by W. T. Lawson, a Columbia Freshman, in 0:24. The winner of the second heat was J. E. Cowdin, of Harvard. Much to the delight of the University of Pennsylvania boys, H. H. Lee, of that college, won the final heat of the 100-yards dash in 0:10 4-5. Stewart of the College of the City of New-York, was disqualified for a foul. The two-mile walk was won by E. H. Sayre, of Columbia, a good walker, in very bright blue silk trunk, in 16:49 2-5. The pole-vaulting at the start was interesting, but it lasted so long that it grew monotonous. G. L. Heins, of the University of Pennsylvania, one of the smallest and best of the contestants, began by skinning one of the shins on the bar, and aided by being carried into the tent, exhausted. The vaulting resulted in a tie between J. H. Waller, of Princeton, F. H. Lee, of Columbia, and G. L. Heins, of the University of Pennsylvania. The final heat of the 440-yards run was won by C. H. Cogswell, of Dartmouth, in 0:54. 2-5; J. H. Taylor, of Columbia, was second. In the final heat of the hurdle race, J. E. Cowdin, of Harvard, was the winner, in 0:19 2-5. In "putting the shot," a 16-pound iron ball, F. Larkin, of Princeton, was the winner, scoring 33 feet 6½ inches. The running broad jump, in which a good deal of interest was manifested, was won by J. P. Conover, of Columbia, who jumped 20 feet, one of the best jumps recorded in any collegiate contest. G. C. Thayer, of the University of Pennsylvania, was second, jumping 19 feet 7 inches. It will be seen that New-York's colleges won their full share of the laurels, if such a little game. The University of Pennsylvania men came up with some idea of running away with most of the honors, but they were disappointed. The peculiar cheers of the different colleges were heard many times throughout the afternoon, and may still be echoing and re-echoing among the hills and rocks of Westchester County.

TALMAGE'S FRIENDS REJOICING.

The absence of Dr. Talmage from the meeting at the Brooklyn Tabernacle last evening did not materially lessen the attendance. Deacon Corwin conducted the services, and made an address, in which he said he supposed it was useless to disguise the fact that he and his hearers were thinking of something that had passed. He felt very much as though he and they had been through a battle which had been different from anything of the kind ever experienced before. It was, Deacon Corwin thought, useless to disguise the fact that there were those who did not love their Pastor to a degree which would prevent them from getting the necessary amount of sleep. The exact position of such persons he could not understand. They would, perhaps, discover some time that they were mistaken. Dr. Talmage's friends would never forget those who stood shoulder to shoulder and elbow to elbow with them during their hard fight. They would not forget the action of the former Pastor of the church, the Rev. Dr. Rockwell, of whom some of them had spoken harshly, but who, nevertheless, would not swerve from the side which he found was the right one. The Rev. J. G. Evans, a member of the Presbytery, expressed the opinion that that body had acted unwisely in trying Dr. Talmage. He was glad that the accused Pastor had come out of the furnace without the smell of fire upon his garments. The Rev. R. B. Kimball, a Congregationalist, said he had known Dr. Van Dyke for many years, and though he regarded him as a first-rate fellow when the spirit of God possessed his soul, he believed it was the spirit of the devil that filled his soul when he pressed the charges against Dr. Talmage. The speaker could not conceive why the charges were preferred, unless it was an effort of the devil to overthrow the Christian Church.

THE DAVENPORT INQUIRY.

At the continuation of the examination into the charges against United States Commissioner and Chief Supervisor of Elections John I. Davenport yesterday, before Commissioner Lyman, Mr. Davenport produced a memorandum made by Judge Blatchford, in the United States Circuit Court, respecting the powers of Mr. Lyman, as Referee in the case, in admitting or ruling upon the admission of evidence. In this memorandum, Judge Blatchford says the Referee must, under the order of reference, rule on all the evidence objected to—as to whether it relates to the issue or not. Then the rulings can be reviewed. The notice of motion is too vague. It should be a motion to strike out specific evidence which the Referee has admitted against an objection, and has ruled directly to be admissible, notwithstanding the specific objection." Under this ruling, Mr. Davenport then went over the written testimony taken at preceding examinations, and made specific objections to certain parts of it, and Commissioner Lyman made specific rulings on them, which were then recorded in the minutes. Thomas Keyworth and Patrick Green, the latter a Police officer, then testified in respect to their arrest on election day last Fall on the charge of attempting to vote on the authorities, papers issued to them in 1876. The testimony was in the main similar to that taken on previous inquiries relating to the action of Commissioner Davenport in issuing the warrants at that time, and causing the arrests of several parties, as well as in relation to his judicial action in the cases when the prisoners were brought before him.

THE FIFTY-DOLLAR BILL CASE.

END OF THE PROCEEDINGS—THE COLORED BOY GETS BACK HIS MONEY.

The new notorious "fifty-dollar bill case," which has occupied so much of the attention of the public for the past few weeks, seems at last to have taken its place among the things of the past. The complaint against Cashier Clifton A. E. Merritt, of the Metropolitan Hotel, by Lemuel Williams, having been dismissed by the Grand Jury, nothing remained but to discharge the colored boy, Williams, who, being unable to procure bail, had been confined in the House of Detention. In expectation of the discharge of Williams, the General Sessions Court-room yesterday was crowded, among the spectators being many colored people. After Judge Cowing had taken his seat, application for the release of the witness was made, and the court issued the necessary order. When Officer Thomas H. Riley went to the House of Detention with an order directing the presence of Williams in court, the sailor boy appeared surprised, and said he had not been informed of the disposition made of the case by the Grand Jury. He quickly donned his neat blue suit, and accompanied the officer to court. He complained bitterly of the action of the authorities in locking him up in the House of Detention and depriving him of his liberty, as if he was a criminal.

When Williams appeared before Judge Cowing his counsel asked for his discharge, the Grand Jury having disposed of the case.

"I know of no reason for detaining him," said Judge Cowing.

"But how about that fifty-dollar bill?" queried counsel.

"Well, my boy," said Judge Cowing, addressing Williams, "is the fifty-dollar bill which the laundress says you gave her in mistake for a one-dollar bill yours?"

"Well, your Honor," replied Williams, "the Grand Jury says it is, and I suppose what they say must be right."

At this moment the Grand Jury, who had dismissed the complaint against Merritt, filed into court with a bundle of indictments, and remained interested spectators of the proceedings.

"That being the case," said Judge Cowing—"for the Grand Jury is good authority—I don't see why you should not have the fifty-dollar bill. But before the matter is finally disposed of, I should like to consult with the District Attorney."

Assistant District Attorney Lyon, having been asked if there was any objections to giving Williams the bill, inquired whether there were any other claimants for it.

"No," responded Judge Cowing, "the evidence before the Grand Jury, I believe, was that the laundress received it in mistake."

"Then, your Honor," said Mr. Lyon, "if there is no other claimant, I am, of course, willing that Williams should receive it."

Judge Cowing thereupon made an order directing Mr. Stephen Ridgway, the petitioner on the Property Clerk for the fifty-dollar bill, which had remained in the possession of that officer since its production in the Police Court by Mrs. Brown. Mr. Sparks having filled out the order on the Property Clerk, handed it to Williams, who transferred it to his counsel, Mr. Brice, for safe keeping. The latter inquired whether the witness was not to receive the usual remuneration allowed witnesses for their loss of time. Was it, he asked, to be understood that when a man lost money he was to be locked up, while the man charged with stealing it was allowed his liberty? Mr. Lyon said he would willingly do all in his power to accommodate counsel; but inasmuch as the compensation allowed detained witnesses was a matter to be decided by the court, he could take no action, and suggested that application be made to Judge Cowing. By that time, however, the sailor had left the court, and the application had to be postponed until this morning or Monday.

Williams and his counsel, still followed by a crowd of sensation-seekers, then left the court-room, and proceeded to the office of the Property Clerk, where the new banknote, the fifty-dollar bill was handed to the former. He handed it to Mr. Price, requesting that gentleman to give him $5 for present expenses, and retain the remainder for future use. Counsel did as Williams requested, and advised his client to be very careful of himself during his stay in this locality, while awaiting subsequent orders. He also cautioned him against going out late at night or engaging in conversation with strangers on the subject of the fifty-dollar-bill case. Williams then left for the residence of some friends, at No. 106 Gwinnett-street, Brooklyn, E. D., where he will remain until his departure for Washington.

Among the visitors at the office of the Clerk of the General Sessions Court yesterday was Clifton A. E. Merritt, the recent defendant in the case. He was accompanied by his bondsman, Edward Flanagan, of No. 119 Crosby-street, and seemed extremely happy at the termination of his case. Mr. Merritt inquired whether the bond of $1,500 which Mr. Flanagan had entered into for his appearance for trial had been vacated by the action of the Grand Jury, and on being answered in the affirmative, expressed his thanks and withdrew.

A PRIEST CHASTISING A PUPIL.

HOW LITTLE FRANK CASACZA WAS BEATEN—WHAT FATHER HAYES SAYS.

An experiment to enforce discipline among the pupils of the school attached to the Roman Catholic Church of St. Ann, in East Twelfth-street, by beating one of the youngest scholars, is likely to cause considerable trouble to Father Hayes, of that society. About 500 scholars attend St. Ann's school daily. Father Hayes exercises a general supervision over them, their immediate instructors being a number of the Sisters, who devote themselves faithfully to this charitable work. For some months Frank Casacza, not quite 6 years of age, has been a pupil. He returned to his home, No. 326 East Eleventh-street, earlier than usual on the afternoon of Friday, May 2, sobbing violently. He told his mother that Father Hayes had been beating him, and he complained of pain in his head and on his shoulders, back, and legs. He sobbed himself to sleep that night and tossed nervously in bed until morning, frequently screaming as if in the greatest agony. The next day he was unable to go to school. His body was covered with black and blue spots, and over a score of marks, as if of a heavy rod, were visible. The child's story of having been beaten was corroborated by a number of the pupils who live in the neighborhood. He had been punished, they said, by Father Hayes for talking to some of the other scholars in school hours. His jacket had been stripped off and blow after blow had been administered with a strap. The story got abroad and reached the ears of Superintendent Jenkins, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, and an investigation of the case was begun. The first step taken by the society was to send one of its consulting physicians to see the boy. Dr. J. W. Ranney, of East Forty-sixth-street, visited the Casacza family and found the boy much improved in condition, but bearing every indication of having received an unmerciful castigation. Prompted by the society, the mother went before Justice Smith, in the Essex Market Court, and made complaint against the reverend gentleman for assault and battery. Whether owing to the position of the clergyman or the belief that a settlement might be effected without undue notoriety, the examination of the case was conducted with closed doors. Tony Goodman, a boy who had witnessed the punishment, was locked up in the House of Detention for a couple of days and after having given his testimony was set at liberty. Further examination was adjourned until Monday afternoon next, when the counsel for the society will attend to urge the stern which the nature of the case may justify.

The boy was running about yesterday, apparently fully recovered. He had a vivid recollection of the occurrence, however, and rubbed his head and arms to indicate the spots where the "big red strap," as he called the clergyman's instrument of correction, had hurt him the most. A number of persons in the house corroborated the story of the child's condition after the punishment. Mrs. Casacza rolled the child's sleeve up and showed the reporter black and blue spots, which had not yet disappeared. The family are Italians of the better class, and are given by their landlord a character for respectability and honesty. The father, Antonio Casacza, has kept for years a little fruit-stand on the corner of Eighth-street and Broadway, and has acquired from the business, which he has invested in real estate in Hoboken. The eldest daughter, Teresa, is apprenticed to a dress-maker in Broadway. Of the three small children, Frank is the oldest. Superintendent Jenkins has known the family for several years, and speaks highly of its thrift.

Father Hayes, in the long, black gown of his order, passed from the church to the house of St. Ann's Rectory yesterday afternoon, in the best of humor. He is a young man and of muscular figure. He was disinclined to give the details of the punishment, but admitted that he had whipped the boy, but he had considered the fault deserving of such small consequence that he had hardly given the subject a thought since. He deprecated any publicity as liable to injure his reputation. It was suggested to him that he might clear his reputation by making a statement, but he held aloof from the idea. Corporeal punishment he said was never permitted in St. Ann's School, and the practice was departed from this time only for the purpose of making an example of a mischievous boy for the effect which it would have upon the other scholars. Further than to deny that a court had taken cognizance of the case he declined to discuss it.

TWENTIETH DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

About 200 members were present last night at the regular monthly meeting of the Twentieth Assembly District Republican Association. Ex-Judge Dittenhoefer, the President, occupied the chair. After the transaction of some routine business, a resolution was offered expressing sympathy with the colored Southern refugees and directing the Finance Committee to appropriate from the funds of the association for the relief of these refugees, such a sum of money as their judgment dictated, and that it be promptly forwarded to the Relief Committee. Messrs. Jacob Hess, William A. Darling, Alderman Henry C. Perley, and John E. Fingler spoke briefly in favor of the resolution, and it was adopted. An invitation to the association to attend the Henry C. Perley reception to be given in June was received and accepted. The meeting was then adjourned.
